Mr Bryan spoke briefly in condemnation of trusts and an increase of the standing army. He then referred to the fact that Great Britain's government of India often pointed to as a model for what the United States can do in the Philippines and in that connection he said:

Those who have heard nearly all Mr. Bryan's great oratorical efforts say that the address at the tent was one of his most brilliant in spite of his apparent exhaustion. It shounded in trony and wittletems that caught the fancy of the crowd and kept those within hearing continually ap plauding. But the utterances were not convincing, as at no time during the evening did the speaker resort to argument. Mr. Bryan promised his followers many reforms in the event of his election. assured them that if their votes enabled him to take a seat in the White House every power of the executive will be expended to curb the trusts. He promised also that before the expiration of his term of office senators will be chosen by a majority vote of the people and not as they are at present by the state legisla-

Late Reaching Town.

The train that brought Mr. Bryan to the city was more than an hour late when it drew into the Burlington station at South Omaha. To be able to keep his appointments in the theaters in this city, it was found necessary to cut short the addresses along the route, although the throngs which gathered to hear him in the downtown halls were demonstrative beyond expectation. In the briefer speeches Mr. Bryan did not dwell on the isssues. but confined bimself almost altogether to impressing upon voters the importance of going early to the polls and remaining there until all democratic ballots are left in the ballot box. Arrangements had been made for only one speech at South Omaha, but as the people who were able to get admittance to the headquarters were only a small part of those who besieged the building, plans were made for an open air address at Twenty-fourth and O streets. Mr. Bryan delivered his second address from the steps of Dr. McCrann's residence to several thousand people in a vacant lot adjacent. The party was driven rapidly in carriages to Damn on's hall at Nineteenth and Viston streets, where he was introduced by Tom Flynn. The next talk was at Metric hall. At the corner of Thirteenth and Jackson streets Mr. Bryan was met by an escort of his former regiment, the Third Nebraska, which marched behind him to the tent.

At Washington hall not more than 106 persons were present when C. O. Lobeck called the meeting to order and briefly introduced the time until the arrival of Bryan.

As Mr. Bryan entered he was greeted with an ovation from the people who crowded the room. His voice was strained and cracked, as he began to speak.

The speaker appealed for the election of the congressional, state and legislative.
