tute lamps. "I had Boneta drive me at once to Carman's place, and found Carman's coachman, who at first denied all knowledge of the matter, but finally owned up. Then I saw Carman himself, and he also attempted to deny, but when Boneta insisted he reluctantly admitted and tried to throw the blame on his own coachman. Eventually, however, the old fittings were replaced and the carriage as it was seen in Omaha was just as it had been when it carried Colonel Stotsenburg.'

Carman's residence is in the fashionable quarter of Manila and he lives there in style with his wife and two children. The Carmans are a cultured family and are said to have come from Ohio. In business Carman dealt in anything in which he could turn a penny for himself, and those who know him express no surprise that he was found trading with the insurgents.
