WASHINGTON, March 5.—Quite unexpectedly a lively debate was precipitated today at the first business session of the senate of the Fifty-seventh congress.

Mr. Platt of Connecticut offered an amendment to the rules to limit debate in the senate. It is proposed that no purpose be made for discussion upon it, but several senators expressed their views in no uncertain terms.

Senator Mason of Illinois thought it did not go far enough and gave notice of an amendment, under which he said the majority would not be under the control of the minority.

Senators Wellington of Maryland and Bacon of Georgia denounced the effort to change the rules as unseemly, the former challenging the right of the senate to consider the proposition at this session.

Great interest was manifested in the proceedings of the senate today. The session was practically the first of the Fifty-seventh congress, that of yesterday being brief and routine in character.

An immense throng crowded the galleries. The floor pieces presented to various senators were beautiful—even elaborate in design.

Among those remembered were Mr. Blackburn of Kentucky, who returns to the senate after a lapse of several years; Mr. Dubois of Idaho, also a former senator; Mr. Clark of Montana, who now returns to the senate after one of the most notable careers in the country; Mr. Wetmore of Rhode Island, who, after several years of service in the house of representatives, comes to the north wing of the capitol; Mr. Carmack of Tennessee, who has also served in the house and is an experienced legislator, and Mr. Simmons of North Carolina.

Roosevelt is Punctual. Promptly at noon Vice President Roosevelt stepped briskly from the lobby through the right door of the chamber of the capitol. He was greeted with a wave of applause.

The venerable blind chaplain pronounced a brief but feeling invocation. As the vice president ascended to his desk another great wave of applause swept over the galleries.

Then, with a smile upon his face, he called the senate to order. As soon as the reading of the journal had begun Mr. Money of Mississippi asked that it be suspended and that he might present his colleague, Mr. McLaurin, to take the oath of office.

Mr. Morgan of Alabama objected and insisted that the reading should proceed. Mr. Money urged that the proposition be made was a matter of the highest privilege.

"My understanding is," said the vice president, "that the reading of the journal takes precedence over all other matters."

The journal was then read. At the conclusion of the reading, Mr. McLaurin of Mississippi and Mr. Nelson of Minnesota were sworn in by the chaplain of the capitol.

Mr. Platt of Connecticut then gave notice of an amendment to the senate rules, which he proposed to offer tomorrow. The proposition is one to limit debate upon any bill or resolution to "reasonable limits."

In order that the majority of the body may be able to do business in the senate.

Cockrell's Little Joke. Mr. Cockrell suggested, in a spirit of facetiousness, that the reasons for the adoption of the proposed rules had ceased to exist in the senate and, therefore, it was unnecessary now to adopt it.

"They will arise again," remarked Mr. Platt.

Mr. Mason of Illinois, who, since his advent to the senate, four years ago, has been insistent that the rules be changed so as to enable the majority to transact the business of the senate, gave notice of an amendment he proposes to offer tomorrow.
