COULD USE MORE CADETSHIPS.
President Knows Many Young Americans That Deserve a Place at West Point.

WASHINGTON, March 23.—Senator Hawley and General F. V. Sumner, U. S. A., retired, were with the president a short time today. Senator Hawley asked the president to appoint General Sumner's son a cadet at West Point.

"There have been Sumners in the service since 1777," said Senator Hawley. "And we cannot have too many of them." The president will appoint him when there is a vacancy. The trouble is there are too few cadetships-at-large. There are many meritorious cases that the president ought to be able to reward. For instance, there was a soldier in the army who first scaled the walls at Pekin. The president is going to send him to West Point as a reward for his bravery. Other cases should be similarly rewarded.

ATTACKED BY MIDNIGHT MARAUDERS

W. A. Streator, Occupant of the House, Put a Charge of Buckshot into the Neck of One of the Trespassers.

The Melrose hill house which was supposed to have been occupied by the alleged kidnapers last December was the scene of a lively shooting affray early yesterday morning.

The house had been vacant since the abandonment until about ten days ago, when W. A. Streator, a grading contractor, moved into it. Living with him were an unmarried sister, his brother-in-law, J. W. Atkinson, and his brother-in-law's wife. In the room upstairs seven men, employees of his, were sleeping on cots. The only other member of the household was a colored domestic, who was sleeping in the kitchen, which made the total number thirteen.

Streator says that about 2:30 in the morning he heard voices just outside the house, immediately underneath his window. A moment later he heard men entering by the front door. This door was always left unlocked, so there was nothing to prevent any one from coming in. He asked several times who was in the house and what they wanted. Finally one replied, with an oath, that it was none of his business.

Streator then jumped out of bed and taking the shotgun walked to the door of his bedroom.

Three tough-looking men were plainly visible while a fourth stood in the back-ground. They paid no attention to Streator's repeated commands to leave the house, and were apparently consulting among themselves as to what move to make. One came toward Streator, and he warned him if he took another step he would blow off his head. The man took that step and the next instant a charge of No. 6 shot came whizzing through the air, part of them tearing a hole in the left side of the neck and others penetrating the wall. He dropped without uttering a sound and lay for ten minutes as if dead. Then he sat up unsteadily and in a few minutes more his companions, who fled precipitately when the shot was fired, returned and took him away. One of them engaged in conversation with Streator and declared that they had come to his house for any wrong purpose. According to his story, they had come to see one of Streator's boarders, who was a friend of theirs, but he did not explain why they came that unusual hour of the morning for making a call or why they entered without the formality of rapping.

Scene of Excitement.
The scene of the shooting is in the extreme south-western portion of the city near the South Omaha line, and some 100 yards before the Omaha police knew of the affair and could get to the place. It was some after 3 o'clock when a young man giving the name of Charles Livingstone entered the South Omaha police station and asked for a doctor to attend a man who had been shot. He told where the man was and the police declined to have anything to do with the case, for the reason that it was outside of their jurisdiction.

The South Omaha police notified the Omaha central station at 3:30 o'clock and a patrol wagon, with Sergeants Weisberg and Bebout and a number of officers, was immediately sent to the Grover street house.

They returned at 6 o'clock with Streator, having in the meantime car-
