they had left that money out on Center street road. I asked them if they believed that the $25,000 was ever drawn from the bank, and they said that might possibly be true, but they didn't believe it was ever placed by the roadside, as Mr. Cudahy and McGrath said it had been.

Now Acquittal Was Secured. As the trial, the majority of the jurors insisted that the testimony of Callahan and his sister had been well substantiated by the two little McDonald girls. I told them that the testimony of the little girls was to the effect that they had not remembered seeing Callahan in December 19 until their attention had been called to it a couple of months later.

There were four or five men on that jury who had it in for millionaires on general principles and they were determined to acquit Callahan just because the complaining witness was a millionaire and could well afford to lose $25,000.

GOOD START ON LONG TOUR

President and Party Sped Away from Washington for the West.

THROUGH VIRGINIA TO TENNESSEE LINE

First Day Spent in Traversing Historic Ground and Greeting a Loyal and Demonstrative People.

MORRISTOWN, Tenn., April 30.—The special train bearing President McKinley and party to the top of the Pacific coast passed here on the southern railway at 1 o'clock this (Tuesday) morning. Nearly 4,000 persons were at the depot at Bristol earlier in the night and gave the president a rousing reception. President McKinley addressed the assemblage briefly.

BRISTOL, Tenn., April 29.—The first day of the president's long tour to the Pacific coast lay through an historic section in Virginia, across the valleys of the Rappahannock and James, in sight of the homes of Madison and Jefferson, up past the peaks of Otter, so dear to the hearts of the Virginians, into the picturesque Blue Ridge mountains.

The Tennessee line was reached at 10:35 tonight, with the arrival of the train at Bristol. The route to the Pacific coast was over the Southern railway. There the train was shifted to the tracks of the Norfolk & Western for a short cut to Bristol, where it resumed its night over the Southern road.

The start from Washington was made precisely on schedule time. Before 10 o'clock many people had congregated about the station, and when the president and Mrs. McKinley arrived about 10:20, the building was thronged and many persons were congregated on the outside. There was a cheer as the president's immediate party drove up to the station and a general demonstration as the head of the nation and his wife made their way through the crowd to the train. Mrs. McKinley leaned upon the arm of Dr. Rixey and the president and the president's wife were to the greetings which met them at every step. They were accompanied to the train by numerous friends and by many persons distinguished in the affairs of the nation.

The party included Secretary Gage, Secretary Root, Secretary Justice, Mr. McKenna, General Miles, General Corbin, General Sternberg, Secretary Waite of the American embassy in London, Commissioner of Pensions Evans, Comptroller Dawes, General Hayes, Congressman Livingston and a number of the cabinet and other officials. McKinley found the waiting room of the private coach which she and the president are to occupy beautifully decorated with roses and other flowers. She spoke gratefully of the thoughtful care of her friends, and seating herself facing a window, facing the crowd, continued to smile and to acquaintances until the train moved out. The president took his position on the rear platform of the Olympia beside Secretary Hitchcock, hat in hand, a brilliant caparison in his buttonhole and a smile upon his face.

ROANOKE, April 29.—The biggest and noisiest demonstration of the day occurred at Roanoke. Thousands of people were at the station, and the president and his wife were to the greetings which met them at every step. They were accompanied to the train by numerous friends and by many persons distinguished in the affairs of the nation.

CONGRATULATE SOUTHERNERS. "I congratulate the citizens of this city upon its marvelous growth and progress. Twenty years ago you had less, I am told, than 1,000 people in this community. You have more than 20,000 now, and I think if you could supply the home market, you would be a much greater number than that. (Great applause.) I congratulate you, therefore, upon your progress as well as your prosperity. We never had so much to do in all our history as we have now. (Applause.) We never had so much business at home nor so much abroad. We never made so much and never sold so much as we sell this year. (Great applause.) We are expanding our markets. Our productive capacity has become so great that we are not only able to supply the home market, but we require a foreign market for our surplus, and so we are seeking the open door in the Orient for the products of American soil and American labor. What we want to do now is to be prudent in our prosperity. We have had a great storm, and it should come—and they do now of it. Whatever comes let us be fortified by the practice of economy while we are all so well employed. (Applause.) We are not only expanding our markets, but we are seeking the open door for our surplus. The policy of the United States has always been to keep what it originally started with and hold all it honorably gets. (Great applause.) We refused to divide our original possessions and we will be the last to desert our new possessions." (Long applause.)

VIRGINIA TOWN'S GREETING Charlottesville, Lynchburg and Other Places Applaud the President's and Secretary's Brief Remarks.

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va., April 29.—The presidential train, with a tiny flag on the pilot of the engine denoting that the chief magistrate of the nation was on board, arrived at Charlottesville on schedule time. The sun from Washington was made with- out incident. A brief stop was made at Alexandria. A big crowd had assembled at the station there and the president and Mrs. McKinley appeared upon the platform to acknowledge salutes.

Spending through Virginia to this town, the president and his wife were met at the home of Jefferson, people gathered at every town, village and crossroads to see the train go by. At Manassas, Culpepper and Orange the crowds were especially large. At the last place a large American flag flew from a staff, the national cemetery, where are buried many of the nation's dead. As the train approached Charlottesville the party had a glimpse of the old home of President Madison at Montpelier. The pillars of the old colonial mansion were standing and the grounds were trees. At Charlottesville there was an immense assemblage at the station. The students from the university lined up alongside the train and gave the president three rousing cheers and a tiger when he made his appearance. From the platform of his car the president spoke as follows:

It gives me very great pleasure to receive the greeting of the people of Charlottesville and the cheers of the young men of the University of Virginia. (Applause.) Your institution is linked with the great names and great deeds of our history. (Applause.) What an array of immortal names Virginia holds in her keeping to remind us of lofty patriotism, broad statesmanship and noble achievements. (Applause.) To no other state of the American union belongs such a history to preserve and cherish and such examples to inspire and emulate. (Great applause.) May the young men of the state of Virginia prove worthy sons of their noble ancestors and contribute in the future, as they did in the past, to the well being and honor and glory of the republic. (Great applause.) Let me assure you, young gentlemen, that the present and the future hold rich reward for good scholarship, high character and noble endeavors, and the wish which I leave with you is that the time you may have your full share. (Prolonged applause.)

May Substitute Smith. There were calls for Secretary Post, but his only response was to introduce Postmaster General Smith, who said: "This seems to be a very fine service to be performed by the latest secretary of state in the home of the first great secretary of state of the United States. (Great applause.) The present secretary worthily perpetuates the literary fame and the statesmanlike achievements of the first secretary of state, who here and here planned this University of Virginia. (Great applause.) I recall that for many years the chief officer in my department of the public service in the city of Charlottesville was a noble woman, the daughter of a union officer and the wife of a confederate officer. (Great applause.) She was first appointed by General Grant, and when in the early years of the administration of President McKinley the suggestion was made of a change, he answered: 'No, I will remove no one appointed by me, and I will preserve such memories.'" (Great applause.)

Mr. Smith's reference was to Mrs. Long, who was appointed postmistress of Charlottesville by General Grant. She was the daughter of a confederate officer and the wife of a confederate officer. (Great applause.) She was first appointed by General Grant, and when in the early years of the administration of President McKinley the suggestion was made of a change, he answered: 'No, I will remove no one appointed by me, and I will preserve such memories.'" HENRY BOLIN IS A FREE MAN

Receives Pardon from the Governor for His Unexpired Term.

RETURNS TO HIS HOME IN OMAHA

Uncertain About His Plans, but Faces a Future of Hard Work for Himself and Family.

"You've not changed a bit, Henry," was the greeting vouchsafed Henry Bolin, ex-city treasurer, who returned to Omaha last night after four years' confinement in the state penitentiary. "The same jolly old Dutchman and I'm glad to see you back!" This was an attempt at joviality that the occasion seemed scarcely to warrant, as the joy incident to his delivery from prison was overshadowed by melancholy recollections. Out of all his host of former friends not one was there to welcome him home. The author of the foregoing impromptu speech, J. J. O'Connor, was there by accident, having come on other business, and of the crowd of onlookers it is probable that not half a dozen knew him or understood the significance of his return to the city that had witnessed the tragedy of his fall.

He seemed in a cheerful frame of mind, though nervousness of manner indicated that the mood was somewhat forced. It is possible that he thought of another arrival in the city some seven years previously, after a trip abroad, and drew the ready parallel between his reception then and now. But he did his emotions were kept well in hand.

"I rather expected my son or daughter would be here to meet me," said he to a reporter for The Bee, "but I wired them after I had left Lincoln and it may be the message I sent was delayed in delivery." Then, climbing the steps of the Burlington depot, he waited in the court for a street car and looked admiringly at the structure.

Notes the City's Changes. "That's a beautiful building," said he. "They were just laying the foundation stones for it when I went away. And that over there, I suppose, is the union depot. I used to own the lot on which that stands, but it's gone now, with all the rest." Mr. Bolin arrived on the Burlington train at 7:35, having been accompanied from Lincoln by Representatives P. M. Mullein and Vaciarj Buresh. He looks much the same when he went away four years ago. He is somewhat grayer, but his weight remains the same—200 pounds—and he says that his general health is better now than when he last left.

He don't smoke at all now," said he. "That's one of the things I got rid of while I was down there. I used to smoke to excess. Then, I have had enough good, healthy exercise to keep me toned up, and the first two years I was there I had to work pretty hard. I was out in the yards looking after and handling lumber most of the time." He was dressed in a cheap, ready-made suit of some gray stuff, that was evidently fresh from the store. He said he had bought it at Lincoln during the afternoon, just before going up to the executive mansion to thank the governor. His hat, shoes and other articles of apparel corresponded with his suit in simplicity and cheapness.

What the Future Holds. "I haven't any plans for the future as yet," said he. "and won't have until I've had a talk with my wife and brothers. I'm going to try to get on my feet, and I'm able for me to set myself up in business, but I'm to hope my brothers will be able to advance me something. I just want enough to get into some small business. Something in the retail grocery line would suit me first rate." Mr. Bolin then told about his accident at the time the penitentiary burned, describing it in detail, and added that he "wouldn't go through an experience like that again for $200."

Chronology of the Case. Bolin was convicted of being a defaulter while acting as treasurer of the city of Omaha and was sentenced May 25, 1887, to serve nineteen years in the penitentiary. The term embraced three sentences, one of four years, one of five and one of ten. He had served the four-year sentence, one year and thirteen days of the five-year sentence. The governor this morning issued a pardon for the ten-year term and commuted the remaining portion of the five-year term.

The story of Henry Bolin's defection, his arrest and the litigation that followed are well known. The litigation itself dragged through the various courts for nearly two years, and finally came to an end when, in May, 1887, the state supreme court affirmed the ruling of the district court and the former city treasurer was sent to the penitentiary for nineteen years. Bolin was regarded as one of the substantial citizens of Omaha. He had served two terms as county treasurer, one in the state legislature, and was engaged upon his second consecutive term as city treasurer when he was arrested. The expert accountant reported the accounts in very bad condition. There was a shortage, but just how much could not be determined without a thorough examination of the office records. It might range anywhere between $10,000 and $100,000. That morning Bolin left his office saying that he intended to commit suicide.

For several days he was kept under constant surveillance at his home, 1823 West street, as it was believed he would attempt to carry out his threat of self-destruction. It was said that his shortage was due to the fact that he was unable to deny his friends any favor they might ask of him, also to a desire to be considered a "high roller" in speculative circles.

January 10, 1886, he was arrested at his home, charged with embezzlement of the city funds, and that night underwent his first experience in jail. During May of the same year he was tried twice on a charge of embezzling $105,000 of city funds. The first jury disagreed, and was discharged; the second found him guilty. Judge Baker sentenced him to nineteen years in the penitentiary and to pay a fine aggregating $21,000. The case was appealed to the state supreme court and Bolin was released under $50,000 bail.

In May, 1887, the supreme court affirmed the finding of the district court, and Bolin was arrested for the second time. May 25 he was taken to the penitentiary at Lincoln to serve his term.
