HOME FROM THE ORIENT

George W. Lininger and Party Return from Extended Tour Abroad.

INTERESTING COUNTRIES ARE VISITED

Mr. Lininger Makes Material and Valuable Addition to His Art Collection—Interesting Review of the Tour. After a tour of ten months, made in a leisurely manner through the most historic and interesting sections of the Orient, Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Lininger and their granddaughter, Miss Marian Haller, returned to Omaha yesterday morning. Since they left Omaha, the first of last August, they have enjoyed the delights of climate, scenery, associations and historic memories of England, Germany, Italy, Egypt and the Holy Land. They have journeyed by easy stages from place to place, resting by the way as long as their comfort required or the enjoyment of their environments suggested. They visited in Omaha the very best of health and spirits that attest their great enjoyment of their trip. Their return trip across the Atlantic was made in the North German Lloyd steamship Wilhelm der Grosse, and among their fellow passengers was Admiral Schley, with whom they became well acquainted and who expressed to them frequently the pleasant recollections he entertains of his trip to Omaha two years ago. They landed in

NEW YORK MAY 21, after a pleasant ocean voyage, and had it not been that the termination of the trip, their vessel would have beaten the record for transatlantic speed. They hardly stopped after reaching the American shores until they landed at their Omaha home, Mr. F. L. Haller, Mr. Lininger's son-in-law, meeting them in Chicago.

Finde Family Tree.

"Upon leaving home last August," said Mr. Lininger in discussing his long absence this morning, "we went to Paris and spent two weeks very pleasantly in enjoyment of the exposition and interesting sights and localities in and near the French metropolis. Then we spent two months in Germany. While there I put in a great deal of time in looking up my family genealogy and met with remarkable success in tracing my family history back as far as the year 1000, securing all of the needed documents for the construction of the family tree. I found that the family was one of prominence and pronounced respectability in early German history; that one of its members generations since was a duke and that there is a castle on the upper Rhine that is still known as Lininger castle. "While in Germany we visited Berlin, Frankfurt-on-Main and other cities and did not miss the opportunity of witnessing the passion play at Oberammergau. I was much impressed with the evidences of modern progressiveness everywhere manifest in Germany and the changes that have taken place in the last twenty years. American ideas seem to have taken hold of the people of Germany and the cities are enjoying a veritable boom. Omaha is not in it with many of them. This is especially the case in Berlin. I noticed even greater progress when I reached Berlin. Frankfurt-on-Main and other cities are being opened up and flanked with long rows of new buildings of modern architecture. This is being done largely by foreign capital, in which American capital takes a prominent place. I noticed especially that the New York Life Insurance company is interested in some of the investments. "From there we went to Constantinople for two weeks. There we branched to encounter decay that was in strange contrast with the progressiveness found in other portions of Europe. There is no prosperity there. Constantinople has lost its once proud character as the cosmopolitan city of the world. From there we went to Smyrna, whence we went to pass an interesting day in viewing the ruins of Ephesus. Beyroot was our next stopping point for about a week, from which point we enjoyed excursions to surrounding points of interest, among them the city of Damascus, the purest oriental city in the world. This city has never been destroyed, and is practically now what it was in Christ's time. When in that section of Syria we also visited Bealbec, one of the most interesting ruined temples, the Baalath of scripture and the Helopolis of the Greeks, both of which names mean 'the City of the Sun.' Here are found the ruins of three ancient temples, one of which is one of the wonders of the world. This city was built by King Solomon. There is a modern village there built up near the ruins, which are magnificent. "From Beyroot we went to Jaffa, the seaport through which Jerusalem is reached by rail. When I visited that section twenty years ago we went from Jaffa to Jerusalem by private conveyance, but the trip is now made by rail. The visit of the German emperor to that section two years ago was the means of supplying that section with good roads, which were made for the convenience of his tour. "Changes in Jerusalem. "I am very glad that I was able to see Jerusalem twenty years ago, for great changes have been wrought there which seem almost like desecration. They have built a modern city outside of the walls, and even inside they have torn away many interesting relics of antiquity and supplanted them with new and modern structures. Another change I noticed with regret was that all of the sacred spots are made the centers of catch-penny enterprises and the visitor is charged small fees to inspect them. Every man who makes an excavation for a new building discovers something of alleged historic or sacred interest and for an inspection of which he at once begins exacting a fee. The doubtful enterprise of some of these speculative individuals is decidedly confusing to the uninitiated visitor, but having studied the locality before spoliation began, I encountered little embarrassment from it. "Returning to Jaffa, we went by boat to Port Said, Egypt, and from there by rail to Cairo, where we remained for ten weeks. It was while in the latter city and vicinity that I made the greater part of the collection for the library. While there I had an artist paint a frieze, which will be hung in the Egyptian room in the library. It is an exact reproduction of one found on one of the tombs, even to the vivid coloring which is still retained by the original.

Best in This Country.

"When in place the collection will undoubtedly be the best in the west. It includes hundreds of specimens of all kinds calculated to afford the student of ancient history a more or less accurate knowledge of the people of Egypt, the principal appearance, dress, works of art and customs under the changing dynasties during a period of 4,000 years. I shipped five tons of it from Cairo, which is now in bond at the custom house here awaiting my coming. Don't ask me what it represents in dollars, for I do not care to discuss it at that light. Its value consists only of its usefulness for educational purposes. I know that people too often weigh such things by their cost in dollars and cents, and I can tell you that I put a whole lot of money into it. "There are four mummies in the collection, each of which is accompanied by a history of the personage whose outward resemblance in its general features is thus transmitted to us. One of them dates as far as 3,200 years ago. Every article in the collection, when placed, will be accompanied by a concise statement of what it is and what its significance. It will take several months to put it in place, which must be done by persons familiar with Egyptian history and antiquities. The educational idea was my guide in making the selections, and it will be arranged and displayed so that it will afford the student a complete history of the early tribes of Egypt down to the present day. It comprises chiefly works of art, bronzes, statuary, lamps, vessels, ornaments and articles of apparel. I secured one collection of 300 or 400 scarabs. The scarab was the sacred beetle, which was worn as ornaments. Some of them now in existence record the coats of arms of personages who existed 4,000 years ago. Some of them were used as ornaments by royal personages who trod the earth thousands of years ago. It was the custom when their owners were embalmed to remove the bowels and place these and other ornaments inside the mummy, by which means they have been transmitted to posterity. "Many New Pictures. "While in Italy Mr. Lininger collected a great many valuable pictures, which will adorn a second room in the library, along with some which he will supply from his collection at home. Among his acquisitions while in that country was a valuable Rubens. Owing to stringent laws it is difficult to remove works of the masters from Italy and the same difficulty was encountered in shipping mummies and other curios from Egypt, but there are ways to do it and Mr. Lininger found them. "Probably the most interesting art acquisition by Mr. Lininger during his absence in the celebrated picture by Bonaventura, 'The Return of Spring,' or 'The Awakening of Spring,' which he purchased while in London. It will be recalled to the memory of non-artistic Omaha people as the painting through which Carey Judson Warblton was prompted to hurl a chair about ten years ago while it was on exhibition in Omaha, because, in his opinion, it violated his sense of the proprieties. It was shown at the exposition here three years ago, at which time Mr. Lininger tried to buy it for $15,000, but the owner asked $15,000. While in London he expressed to a dealer a wish to buy it and the next day the dealer sent him word that he knew where it was and that it was for sale. The picture was in Paris and a deal was at once concluded for its removal permanently to Omaha.

RELICS OF SPANISH WAR

Guy H. Cramer Receives Sword and Rifle from an Old Comrade. Guy H. Cramer, chief rate clerk in the Burlington passenger department, received a couple of valuable war relics yesterday from his old comrade, M. C. Kneip, formerly packer's yeoman on the United States ship Newark, upon which vessel Cramer served as ship's writer during the Spanish war. The relics are a sword and a Mauser rifle. Concerning them, Mr. Kneip wrote: "The sword was borrowed from the arsenal at Tan-Koo (two) and one-half miles from Taku, on the Pei-Ho river, at the time the Russians took 785 'chinks' and tied their cues together in bunches of five, placed them in the captured magazine and touched same off. "The rifle was one of 807 which were surrendered to the 'Captain McCall' at Apparie, Northern Luzon, December 3, 1898." Mr. Cramer prizes these relics very highly and will give them a prominent place in the valuable collection which he has amassed during his service in the navy when the Spanish war was in progress.

Look Out

For the dirt in some of the leading soda fountains in this city it would surprise the amount of Bugs, flies, roaches and dirt. It is there. Our new 20TH CENTURY FLUITY is the cleanest and most sanitary fountain in town. It has just been put in, has all the latest improvements. Nothing concealed about it. The syringe size kept in bottles right before the drinkers, instead of being hidden in the dirt. Ice is put in the lower part of the fountain through a large door, which, when open, shows the cleanliness inside. Ice creams are kept in specially prepared coolers, so there is no chance for the salt and ice to get in the cream. Our working space is all covered with copper. It is kept bright and clean, so there is nothing to hide. You can stand at the counter and see all the workings. If you want the CLEANEST glass of soda in the city, we can furnish it. Inspection and comparison invited.
