River Land Settlement.

During the past few weeks residents of Webster county, in and near Fort Dodge, have received large sums of money on account of the settlement by the government of the old Des Moines river land cases, which were in the Iowa courts for more than a quarter of a century and then occupled the time of congress for some years. The cares grew out of conflicting claims for land. The United States government was, in fact, at fault and patented the lands to settlers after they had been given to a corporation. Then congress passed an act providing for settlement of the claims against the government and a commission was appointed to pass upon the claims. Last week fifty-three of the original claimants or their heirs received notice from the commission that their claims had been adjusted. The total amount awarded in this bunch is over $60,000. Not all of the claims have as yet been passed on, but will be during the present year, and the last of the famous Des Moines river land claims will have been disposed of.
