EMBODIMENT OF SACRIFICE

Memorial Day Is to Americans Like the Cress of Calvary.

ORATION BY REV. T. J. MACKAY OF OMAHA

Right and Proper, He Declares, that Nations Should Have Reminders of the Follies of Their Forefathers, Lest They Stray.

People of Council Bluffs turned out yesterday to pay tribute to the soldier dead Mrs. Clay Platner of Glen avenue re-turned yesterday from a visit with friends in Craig, Neb. Edwin and Miss Nora Durand of St. alone was this tribute paid to the soldiers louis are guests of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob of the union in the civil war, for the men Neumayer and family. tended the Grand Army exercises at Fairview cemetery.

The exercises began in the morning, when the members of the Union Veteran legion proceeded to Walnut Hill and the arm torn off at the shoulder and his right Catholic cemeteries and without any formal ceremonies placed wreaths and flowers upon the graves of their comrades. The exercises, in charge of Abe Lincoln post, Grand Army of the Republic, began at 1:30 in the afternoon, when the parade, in charge of Commander Lindt, formed at the southwest corner of Bayliss park.

Those in the Parade.

Heading the column was a platoon of police, in command of Captain Denny, and directly behind rode Commander Lindt and and Bugler Judson, followed by Company guard, in command of Captain Matt Tinley. Then came McFadden's Drum corps war, seventy-two in nnumber. Behind the America, the Knights of Pythias and the Odd Fellows. The carriages containing the speakers of the day and the ministers, the women of the Relief corps and the city officials followed, the rear of the column being brought up by the fire department. Arriving at Fairview cemetery the exercises were opened after reveille by the drum corps by E. L. Shugart, president of the day, calling the assemblage to order. Rev. James Sims made the opening prayer and was followed by a selection by a quartet, consisting of I. M. Treynor, R. W.

Bailey, W. L. Thickstun and J. Barton. Rev. T. J. Mackay's Oration. Then President Shugart introduced Rev. T. J. Mackay, rector of All Saints' Episcopal church, Omaha, who delivered the oration of the day. He said:

oration of the day. He said:

Today a nation walks with solemn footsteps among the graves of its dead. The turmoil and strife of the common day is put aside, and with reverent hearts and loving hand a mighty nation of freemen are gathered together to do honor to the memory of the noble dead who freely gave their lives, a willing sacrifice, that the nation might forever live. The universal observance of this day is a beautiful evidence of how we may safely trust to the instinct of humanity. The loving act of a few women in decorating the graves of their departed heroes has grown into a national holiday, which outranks all our festivals and great days, even that of the festivals and great days, even that of the Declaration of Independence.

He then observed the great difference between the numerous holidays of the old world and the few of the United States, saying that ours are the result of the sentiment of a great nation arising as one man and the celebration marks the grand underlying principles of a nation of intelligent men.

For nearly a hundred years had the nation lived with a cancer eating into its very heart, having, indeed, a name to live for, but ready to die. Its birth into a national life had, indeed, taken place, but its birth into the glorious liberty of a righteous living people had not occurred. We went into that awful conflict and carnage a nation of children. We came out a nation of thoughtful men.

It has been claimed that the celebration of such a day as this serves to keep alive the feeling of sectional animesity between two great portions of our union. I once thought so myself, but now I say with solemn emphasis, perish the thought, it is right and proper that people and nations should have reminders of what they once have been, of the follies and crimes of their forefathers, lest their feet should stray in the same forbidden path. This dearly loved Decoration day stands to Americans as the cross of Calvary to the Christian, as a reminder and embodiment of the great and abiding principle of sacrifice.

Glowing Tribute to Volunteers.

Rev. Mackay paid a glowing tribute to He recounted the Spanish war, the extenfor the heroism and the awful sacrifices made by the Grand Army, the relics of which you behold today in our thin and fast fadeing ranks, you would have had like our South American neighbors."

In closing Rev. Mackay said: "And as our came among you. As our comrades fall by our side let us close up shoulder to shoulder in ever increasing love and friendship." The exercises were brought to a close with an invocation by Rev. W. H. Cable,

This mound of flowers is a beautiful tribute to the memory of the unknown dead comrades. This, my comrades, let us contemplate with reverence. In Arlington cemetery an enduring monument, substantial and grand in its simplicity, covers all that remains of 12,000 comrades, gathered from the battlefields of Buil Run and along the Rappahanock, who could not be identified. Dozens of the killed and wounded were burned to ashes in the terrific fires that swept a large portion of the Wilderness battlefield. Andersonville 13,000 of them went down to a horrible death. Their graves are, too, unknown. Let us, for the moment, contemplate the patriotic self-sacrifice and heroism of these men. With death, starvation and tortures unspeakable starting them in the face only 241 could be found that would fortswear their flag and government and take the oath of the southern confederacy. The pages of history do not record such self-sacrificing heroism. When the union called them they came. She waved them onward and they died. Wherever these unknown comrades of ours lie, whether on the battlefield, in the swamps or prison pen, or where the dreary hospitals win-row their dead, shadowed by the flag they shielded they shall stand forever the guardisn sentinels of the nation's love. "Unknown they fell within the sheltering sod.

Much Railroad Talk.

The determination of the Great Western o build a line from Fort Dodge into Sioux City has created great railroad activity in Iowa. It is learned here that by reason of this move on the part of the Great Western the Illinois Central and Northwestern contemplate shortening their lines into Sioux City and the Omaha road has plans for building a separate line from Lemans to Sioux City. The surveyors of the Great Western are at work in a number of places along the new short line, both in the direction of Omaha and of Sioux City.

Memorial day was observed in Des Moines oday, and never before in the history of the city has there been more general cessation of business and recognition of the holiday. The parade to Woodland cemetery in the forenoon was a large one, there being 9,000 persons in line. The veterans of the Spanish war participated in the ceremonies and formed a part of the parade.
