Westerners Meet on Common Grounds to Urge Their Claime.

EFFORT ON DEFINITE PLAN

Benefits of Cheyenne Meeting Will Be Apparent in Washington-General News of Nebranks.

(From a Staff Correspondent.) LINCOLN, June 25 .- (Special.) -- Congress man Burkett, who has been authorized to call a conference of his colleagues at Washington in November or December for the legislation, declares that the object of the recent meeting in Cheyende was not espe- $9,540. cially to arouse enthusiasm, but rather to harmonize the views of western men so that a united effort may be made in the interest of some definite plan.

"Everybody in the arid or semi-arid states is already in sympathy with the irrigation proposition, but as to the best difference of opinion," said Mr. Burkett. to secure federal aid. The difficulty, however, has been more through lack of harmony than direct opposition from those interested. The west is determined now to present a solid front and make a united effort. Unity of action may be said to have been the object of the meeting.

Several bills were submitted and re viewed, but no opportunity was given for any expression, other than as individuals. An agreement will be reached in my judgment before the next session of congress and a bill will be formulated that senators and congressmen can unite upon, and if this is done I believe we can hope for good re-conditions differ in the various states. In some states the problem of distribution of water is a serious one while in others it is more simple. The place of conservation of water in some states may be very far removed from the place where it is intended to be used. In others the place of conservation and use may be close ogether. Then the question of distribution is looked upon differently in different states. In some states the expense is much larger than in others. For example, it was said by one person that it would be useless to undertake any plan in his state expecting it to cost less than $500,000, while in other states the estimated cost of irrigating works was only one-sixth as great.

Differences of Opinion.

"A great difference of opinion relative to the different methods and plans was disclosed in the debate in congress last, winter Some contended that the money should not be appropriated by the general government, that the government should assume control and management of the work of building and of operating the system after it was built. Some persons contended that the water should be carried to the individual who used it and sold to him direct by the government. There were others who believed that the government should go no farther than conserving the water and making it available and that the distribution thereof should be provided for by state laws and be under state regulation and control. The diversity of opinion as to the degree of control that the federal government should assume is the great stumbling block to united action. But those differences must be harmonized somewhere along the line and this we hope to accomplish by conference and investigation. Results are what we want and some legitimate method will probably be adopted that will she there, and the climate and the water is also abundant if properly cared for. The important thing is to get all the elements together at the proper season of the year.'
