ST. PAUL, July 16 .- (Special Telegram.) lined up against the Saints today for the first game of the series. Kelly and Shannon, two men obtained from Indianapolis, and Schafer, Colorado Springs' fast infielder, were in the game, Kelly and Shannon failed to make a good impression. Cogan pitched for the Saints and let Omaha dawn -Omaha faced a new proposition when it pitched for the Saints and let Omaha down ham. with seven hits and two runs. While the score was close the victory was a decisive one and the outcome of the game after the third inning was never in doubt. Payno allowed but nine hits, but the Saints succeeding in bunching the drives in two innings and two runs resulted in each. Cogan's three-bagger and Ryan's home-run was a line drive over the center field and BOMBARD AMERICANS' UMPIRE season. Toman had a bad few minutes in Fans at Cleveland Game Horl Cushthe short field, making two of the four errors charged to Omaha, but aside from the two misplays he played a brilliant fielding game. summer months? Have you made any, or have you, without giving the matter due thought, reached the inconsistent, yet too frequent conclusion to eliminate this most important feature from your business during the hot months? These questions are asked with the hope that every reader who is contemplating such action will sit down and think the matter over very thoroughly and reason it out with us as it were. This idea that the summer is the time not to advertise is certainly not gaining favor in the retail world, but it is being fondly and tenaclously adhered to by a few whom we should like to have the honor of con-We have never yet heard a reason, strong enough or logical enough to justify the complete discontinuation of advertising during the summer. Yet the merchant who does this invariably believes that he is pursuing the right course, and this is why it is so hard a task to convince him of his errorfor error we verily believe it is. These merchants say that in the summer "advertising doesn't pay." To this we wish to reply without qualification, that if advertising doesn't pay, storekeeping doesn't pay.

The store that cannot be benefited by good. judicious advertising, at any season of the year, should be abandoned for one that can The proper sort of advertising will invariably bring returns sufficient in proportion, when compared with the outlay involved, to show a substantial profit. You must not forget that we inhabitants of this terrestrial sphere-all of us-have to eat and sleep and wash and dress in summer as in any other season.

We are obliged to pay our good money for these accommodations, too, and the merchant who keeps for sale the goods necessary to perform these important functions and advertises the fact will keep them a mighty sight shorter time than his misguided brother who lays in his stock, shuts off his advertising and then devotes himself

1 annum and will be due in 1916.

If suits of clothes and hats and shoes and the innumerable flimsy materials which combine to make our women-folk look beautiful grew on the trees to be torn off as the necessity arose we should be strongly inclined to advise every merchant in the country not to use a single line of advertising space. But happily (or unhappily) such ideal conditions do not exist, and the consumers' good money has to be produced before he can secure any of the many everyday requisites which in the summer are just as numerous, if not more so, than those of the other seasons. If we all kept our own poultry and cattle and had our fruit garden and corn patch and owned acres of pasture land and vegetable fields it would be time for dealers in eatables to call a convention to seriously consider the necessity of stopping advertising altogether. But until such an impossible condition exists, and while the system of buying and selling is still in vogue, advertising will remain one of the foremost requisites of retaildom, and without it the selling end will never reach its most successful issue; in fact, it cannot expect to be successful, in the true sense of the word, without it.

Now, Mr. Non-Advertising-in-the-Summer-Merchant, have you ever sat over in a corner, all by your lonesome, and talked this matter over with yourself? No? Well, before the summer of 1901 gets too big a start on you, pick out the corner and sit in it and then think with all your might. Think of it from the standpoint that your business falls off principally because your advertising falls off. Produce all the negative argument disfavoring this theory that out prejudice or bias and we really believe that you will discover a better positive tion of business and envying the prosperity other to one who is inclined to think. 000 already voted.

Don't allow the existing conditions or conditions alleged to exist in other stores to interfere with your judgment. Use your own discretion combined with the knowledge of your own affairs, and at the same time seriously consider the question with the hope that you may become a convert to the summer advertising habit. If you will do this conscientiously we believe you will reach a conclusion in harmony with the ideas of the solicitors for your local papers. If you have a pet theory, don't give it up without a struggle worthy of the parting. Give it the extreme pro and con benefit and you will then advertise in the summer. The summer advertiser of course outnumbers the non-advertiser by ten to one at the least. This is a modest estimate-modest because we wish to give you the benefit of every doubt that might exist. Now if you are one in ten and the other nine all advertise, isn't it logical that at least there is a doubt as to the wisdom of your course? The mere statistics would indicate that you are radically wrong, we think, although we are not advocates of following the leader unless you become convinced of the fact that he is leading you in the right direction. If you have advertised in the summer and failed to secure a substantial benefit from it, then we should say that something is radically wrong with the advertising. Look into this question; study it out. It is vital to you. The people of the country do not become comatose in the summer and then wake up in the fall and purchase sufficient to satisfy them until the following summer. Salaries do not cease to be paid and spent just because the thermometer begins to climb. The population of the earth increases every day. The mouths to fill and backs to clothe are constantly becoming more numerous. Weather doesn't affect these conditions; you can think of.
