BURDENS OF THE BLUECOATS

Suffering Humanity Imparts All Its Woes to the Policeman.

DISTRUSTFUL WIFE HAS NEED OFDETECTIVE

Tales of Perjured Faith and of Various Tribulations Are Poured Into Policeman's Ear in Fact as Well as Fable.

J. J. Donahue, Chief of Police:

Dear Sir-I am compelled to be out of the city until October I and fear that while I am away my husband will be rather gay. Will you please find out what company he keeps and what time he goes to bed nights and let me know. Find inclosed stamped envelope for reply. Very truly yours,

MRS.

The man who coined the phrase, "tell your troubles to a policeman," sounded the keynote of a comic opera that has been enacted since the dawn of time and is being played today upon the streets of Omaha. The policeman is the father confessor for all creeds and all conditions. The newsboy who is "shortchanged" of a copper cent tells his troubles to a policeman and the millionaire banker who fears he will he held up while going home of a night does the

Another woman not long ago called at the station with a somewhat similar complaint, though in her case matters had progressed farther. She was positive her husband was untrue to he. She even knew the name of the "corespondent" love my husband," she said, "and all I ask of you is to arrest that woman and send lived in. her to the penitentiary, and then bring my husband home to me. It was along last May that a colored family living out on Lake street complained to the police that a mourning dove harbored by their next door neighbors, wept so bitterly at night as to keep the complainants awake. The bird would roost in a mulberry tree, they said, and pour out the anguish of its soul upon the night air. sobbing so violently as to be audible for blocks in every direction. The only foundation for it was that the man had recently returned from a visit to relatives in Arkansas, the snake's paradise, and that the eggs he had placed under the hen were spotted, being those of the guinea fowl.

The third and last incident of this class belonging to the neighborhood was a clothesline fight between two families because the stovepipe of one emptied its volume of vapor into the parlor window of the other. The oftending pipe projected from the roof of a shanty standing on low ground, whereas the sings the saddest love songs every night parlor (or, in this case, the reception room) was of a cottage built upon an eminence, the difference in altitude being just sufficient to bring the mouth of the pipe opposite the window of the cottage. was not a successful man. Now, I do not remember any man who ferent things which people want, from had been less "successful" than this poor creature. Yet, when he died, a year or two afterward, it was found that he had hoarded more than $2,000,000. He was what is called a "miser." This is a Latin word -which means what we call "miserable. It has come to be used to represent just tween me and the man who made the such people as he-who live only to pile

> This man had not eaten an orange, or an apple or a strawberry for twenty years. He saw other people eat such things, but he would not eat them because he wanted to keep the money which they would cost him. He had made his bed, when anybody made it, because he wished to "save." as he would have said, the money which he would have had to pay for having it million dollars. But they were not enough to give him a claim to be called a successful man.

Money-as money-is simply vulgar. This about, is the bright phrase of one of the most charming women of the world. If I were a successful farmer I should not think of piling 500 turnips in my drawing room. If were a successful engineer, still I should not have the pile of macadam behind the chair in my dining room, if I were a successful street contractor I would not have one of my garbage carts dump its contdnts on the floor when I gave a ball for my daughter

For just the same reasons I should never talk of money if I were a successful merchant or inventor or the wife of one.

This is to be observed, that success for man or a woman is to be measured by three standards, for each man-and the same thing may be said of each woman-is a child He has the use of two tools. One tool is named body and the other tool is named mind.

Without going into detail any more than I have done in speakstand up for what was due them. But he ing of the body, illustrations will show where the detail belongs, and will be a good guide as one arranges his rules for the training of his mind. For instance, reading and writing are spoken of as if they were parts of mental training. A boy or a man wants to be able to read his own language well, so that he can read aloud to another and be heard with pleasure and be understood. He wants to write his own language, so that, if he have to convince another person, he can use the right words in the right way. There is no use in writing if what you write is so dull that nobody wants to read it, or is so much mixed up in language, perhaps, or in thought, that nobody can understand it when he does read it. A man wants to communicate with other men and with the women in the world. He wants, therefore, to know how to think made. In such ways he had "saved" his two carefully and how to express in words what he thinks. And, going beyond mere reading and writing, a man should so train his mind that he can understand reasonably well what other people are thinking or talking

We need not expect too much from school education, but the training at school or somewhere else ought to go so far that a boy or man can understand the language of his time. If he talks to an electrician he should understand what the electrician If he talks to a forester or a means. farmer he should understand either.

And, as I have intimated, behind the mere processes of speech or writing, he wants to think carefully. He wants to know if h is thinking as he should. He does not want to have other people fool him, and, for the same reason-nay, even more so-he does not want to deceive himself.

The secret of it all is not far off. Here is God, who shines in the sun-who gives the glory to the sky-and who speaks in my heart to tell me what is right and what is wrong. If I make Him my comhis body for all it is worth, in keeping it panion and tell Him everything He is willing to take me as a companion and tell me

In the Woman's Home Companion Miss Knobe tells about "The Lady Warwick School for Women Farmers."

"In this rural spot, on the outskirts of Reading, only an hour's run from London, the beautiful and accomplished countess of Warwick is sponsoring a most original scheme whereby English girls may be coached in agriculture. There are agricultural colleges, to be sure, wherein limited instruction is given the wrongly named weaker sex; but in this singularly interesting school in England exclusively for women-the only one in England, if not in the world-is a thorough poetico-practical course, if it may be so called, from the raising of cabbages and chrysanthemums to the building of a pigsty and the making of a hav-mound. These sturdy daughters of Ceres, in other words, are fitted to run farm.

"This unique school was opened in October, 1898. The minimum period of training is two years, and at the end of that time a certificate is awarded. The theoretical part of the course is systematically pursued in Next to this Dakota plant is another the agricultural department of the adjacent the metal may be mined. WHAT MEN SMOKE.

Their Taste Has Changed Greatly

Within the Past Few Years.

"The taste of men in their choice of clara," said a dealer to a Washington Star reporter. Thas undergone a great change recently.

"Some years ago our customers demanded black, or maduro, cigars. The color known to the trade as colorado-maduro, or medium dark colored cigars, were second choice and light colored wrappers to make them very dark and it tried but they have processes for partially pleaching the leaf. During the Spanish account to the trade as colorado-maduro, or medium dark colored cigars, were second choice and light colored or colorado or claro, had third call.

"Now it is the cigar with a light colored wrapper that has the call. The strong cigar is sure death to the nervous system and it may be that men after years of experience, are finding it out and are almost impossible at times to supply the demand for colorado or claro wrappers and they think is right.

"I well remember that I used to soak in a liquor obtained from a decoction of my light coloron and they think is right.

"I well remember that I used to soak in a liquor obtained from a decoction of steped tobacco leaves all of my light coloron wrappers to make them very dark and it tried our particular the strong of straining the Spanish colored they think is right.

"I well remember that I used to soak in a liquor obtained from a decoction of my light coloron on the thousands that daily pass through their hands, if it be too decount of my light color-bread they think is right.

"I' well remember that I used to soak in a liquor obtained from a decoction of my light color-bread warpers to make them very dark and light color-bread warpers to make them very dark and it tried our patients. The strong clara is sure death to the nervous as men take for granted the quality of the filler or accept the dealer's word."
