NEW HAVEN, Oct. 22,-In a great amphitheater, bedecked in blue and illumined by long strings of orange-hued lanterns and Greek fire flaming and smoking skyward from poles erected about the campus, the sons of Yale witnessed touight an allegorical performance by the dramatic association of the university and listened to the songs of the student chorus drilled especially for this feature of the bicentennial celebration.

After an afternoon devoted to foot ball, in which the 'varsity eleven showed its prowess and the veteran heroes of the gridiron matched their strength and old-time skill victoriously against the college team, it was not unfitting that graduates and students should assemble within the historic campus and voice their appreciation of the festival time. They ranged themselves by classes within the amphitheater, nearly 8,000 strong, every class having a distinctive transparency to mark its position and joined with vigor in the bicentennial songs.

The campus celebration was a part of the festivities, to which only the graduates and students were, according to the first plans of the committee, to be admitted, because of the limited space within the amphitheater, but in deference to the general desire to witness the dramatic performance many others were let in, so that the space within the great oval of seats occupied by the Yale men was filled with a throng, of which women formed the chief

Other scenes depicted the quaint cere monies of initiation into the old freshmen toric Yale fence by day and night; the interior of a student's room; scenes typical of things familiar to every graduate, and the finale, showing the students in chapel.

College Songs, Gay and Earnest.

Between each of the scenes there were familiar college songs by the student chorus, in which all the thousands of graduates ranged about the amphitheater heartily participated. Several bands were stationed on the campus and at intervals added to the musical demonstration of the evening.

The "Boola" song was given with an unction never known before, when A. M Hirsh, its composer, of the class of 1901, known familiarly as "Pop," the catcher of the base ball team for two years, rose from his seat in response to calls from the amphitheater and personally led the great chorus.

An even more impressive feature of an impromptu nature was the reception acclosing chapel scene. Thousands of voices 1898 conductor of the Pittsburg orchestra. joined in the music and when the likeness of Elihu Yale was presented on the stage there was an enthusiastic outburst of applause. Someone immediately started the refrain "Bright College Years." All the immense assembly caught up the familiar died today, aged 81 years. At that in the rear of the amphitheater seats and amid cheers and class yells the assemblage dissolved.

Musical Features.

While the campus celebration was largely of a private character, restricted to the wearers of blue badges and their friends. the general public was not without sources entertainment. The New Haven green was again brilliant tonight, with ropes and stars of many-hued electric lights, and as an addition to the Illumination the whole green was encircled with colored lanterns A band concert was given here in the early part of the evening.

One of the most notable exercises of the flay was the choral performance by the Gouned society of New Haven of the ora torio "Hora Novissima."

This production, the work of Horatio Parker Battel, professor of theory of music in the university, was given in the Hyperion theater at 4:30 this afternoon under the composer's personal direction. An audience

Clemens, who is one of the bicenteanial guests, was the recipient of popular honors both at the performance of the oratorio and at the campus celebration. His appearance in the theater this afternoon was the signal for a general demonstration of applause and at the dramatic performance at the campus "Mark Twain" was saluted by the voices of all the sturdy sons of Eli in unison.

The consideration of the southern work brought out a warm discussion, as it involved the authority and jurisdiction of the general superintendent. The question in volved was whether the general superintendent had authority in the southern states, and it was only settled in the affirmative after a prolonged discussion. The vote irdicated beyond a doubt that the Universalist church has accepted general superintendency as a fundamental policy throughout the whole denomination. President Charles H. Hutchinson of Chirago appointed the following persons as a committee of five to form, with a committee from the Unitarian church, a joint commission which shall co-operate to keep th two churches from waste and duplication in towns where the two cannot be supported: Rev. WASHINGTON, Oct. 22.-Increased efficiency in our big naval guns must be looked for from the use of heavier projectiles and the production of powder possessing high and perspiration so far as color goes, acballistic qualities, rather than from an increase in the weight and dimensions of the guns themselves, says Rear Admiral Charles O'Neil, chief of the Naval Bureau of Ord-make an increase in either respect, and the bureau now will confine itself to developing weightier projectiles and powder of greater energy. The only material change in the system of gun construction last year was a provision that guns of and above six inches in caliber for greater safety shall have an inner and outer tube, instead of a solid forging as heretofore. Admiral O'Neil believes that the ordnance equipment United States naval vessels is fully up to the highest standard maintained abroad for vessels of corresponding age and class and says he knows of no guns affoat or soon to be put affoat equal in energy to those man- smaller. ufacturing for the United States navy. The manufacture of gun mounts and other ordnance fittings for the new vessels of the navy, he says, is well in hand, and he has every reason to believe that the outfits will be completed when the versels are ready to receive them.

During the past fiscal year 153 guns for the navy were completed and 156 are now

Admiral O'Neil believes that the subject of submarine boats is being given undue prominence. If these boats are shown to have any value, he says, it will be as an adjunct to the system of coast defense. They cannot and will not, he continues take the place of naval vessels of regular type or render a less number necessary. Submarine boats, says the admiral, have not yet emerged from the experimental stage.

The use of torpedoes on large vessels has been practically discontinued, no provision having been made for them in the latest battleships and cruisers. Like the other bureaus of the Navy department, the ordnance bureau also has suffered much delay in getting steel castings for gun carwholly incorrigible and an utterly worthless riages. New carriages for five-inch guns were supplied Brooklyn after the battle of Santiago. Experiments at Indian Head with a three-inch gun have shown that firing at the rate of one and a half shots per minute, such guns are rapidly eroded. though this rate is below that required in buttle.

Incidentally Admiral O'Neil says the real issue in the board was not double against single turrets, but seven-inch against eight-inch and six-inch guns. He argues strongly in favor of the seveninch weapon.

The estimates accompanying the report aggregate $10,902,000, the largest items being for armor and armament, $6,000,000, and for navy yard plants and ammunitions. $2,423,000. There also are items for replacing the present foreign-made guns or New Orleans and Albany and for a new battery for Newark.

Business was going on at the bank as usual and nothing was in evidence about the place lo show the crisis that had just been passed. Not a word bearing on the peculiar features said to be involved in the return of $800,000 in cash and collateral made by the missing men yesterday could be obtained today. The attitude of everyone connected with the matter was taken to indicate that the trouble was passed and that the local bank men had no intention to take further steps. The bank examiner refused to discuss the case today, or what steps were being taken by the United States authorities toward tracing Smith and Swift. It is now believed they have sought a safe biding place in Capada.

Suspicious Mistakes Were Noted. It was learned today that frequent mistakes in recording deposits by Teller Smith aroused the suspicion of a prominent depositor, who last week conferred with an officer of the bank. This officer charged Smith with irregularities in the record. Smith denied that anything was wrong and the matter was dropped. This action alarmed the suspected men and the following night they went to the bank, removed the cash and securities and Smith went to Boston. It is believed that Swift took the property to a camp in a neighboring town and concealed it.

BOSTON, Oct. 22.-The United States district attorney's office in this city has been informed of certain happenings at the Merchants' National bank in Lowell and as a result Chief Inspector Watts of police headquarters has been asked to detail officers on the case. Just what official information has been imparted to the district attorney and by him to the police is not given out. It is known, however, that the inspectors have been assigned to the case.
