of injunction.

3. Whether the character and function of a writ, restraining the parties to the action from deing certain things, issued at its commencement, are those of a temporary order of injunction or a temporary restraining order, must be determined by the form and substance of the order so issued.

the form and substance of the order so issued.

4. The chief distinguishing features of the two writs is that the temporary restraining order contemplates a further hearing on the application for a temporary injunction upon notice to and a hearing by the adverse par y on such application.

5. Writ set out in the opinion construed and held to be a temporary order of injunction, on the dissolution of which an amount for a supersedeas bond should have been fixed, by which the order of dissolution may be superseded.

6. The temporary order of injunction issued in this action held not to dispossess the defendant city of its streets and alleys or take from it the authority granted by law to control and regulate the use thereof, and that the order is not for that reason yold.
