Board of Education and High School Faculty Take Part in Consecrating to Popular Education a Handsome Structure.

Five thousand people visited the new High school building yesterday afternoon. From 3 until 5 the corridors and lecture rooms of the handsome new building were crowded with visitors.

South Thirteenth street and West Farnam street had an equal interest in the formal opening of the handsome new building. Assyrian mothers who brought their children along to act as interpreters.

In the art room a group of Italian women gathered about the casts of Venus of Milo and other well known pieces of statuary which are used by the classes.

At 2:30 exercises were held in the large study room on the second floor of the building. The room will seat 250 people and as many more stood during the program.

President John C. Barnard opened the exercises with an address of welcome. Mr. Barnard reviewed the history of the old High school building, which was a model in its day.

Superintendent Pease spoke briefly of the growth of the public school system and discussed the change which there has been in the attitude of the public to free schools.

The occasion—its significance, was the subject of an address by C. E. Herring. He said that the opening of the building marks a new epoch in the school history of Omaha and is a forerunner of great improvements which are to be made in the city within the next few years.

After the singing of "Butterflies" by Miss Grace Northrup, Mr. Latenser presented the keys of the new building to Fred Stubbendorf, chairman of the buildings and property committee for last year.
