America with a nurse and proceeded to "burn the bridges." Timothy and his faithful nurse, who carefully hid his identity, pass through many hardships, but in due course of time he discovers who he really is, falls into the estate that is rightfully his and everything turns out lovely.

The Travelers Railway Guide (western section), formerly the Rand-McNally office railway guide, appears as an octavo in place of twelve, and as formerly the new management of the guide has introduced several improvements, among which we would make special mention of new state maps, substituted for the folded map formerly shown in the back, and of the population shown on the timetable pages after the names of cities and towns.

One of the most important volumes of poetry published in a long time is "Vladna and Other Verse," by Edward Robinson Taylor and published by A. M. Robertson, San Francisco. The collection is one of unusual literary merit, and is drawn from a wide and varied field.

"The Reflections of a Lonely Man," by "A. C. M." The musings of this "Lonely Man" are so interesting one regrets he has hidden his identity in initials. Certain it is the "Lonely Man" is a keen observer and his thoughts and observations for the benefit of others. He says: "It is well to think one's own thoughts occasionally, even though they be wrong."

"Maimonides," by David Yellin and Israel Abrahams, is published under the joint auspices of the Jewish Publication Society and the Jewish Historical Society of England. This volume is the first of a series of books in the "Maimonides" series. The aim of this series is to present biographies of famous Jews, with special regard to the general history of the periods in which they lived.

"The Roman Road," by Zack, and published by Scribners, is a volume containing three stories or novelettes. "The Roman Road," "The Balance" and "Thoughty." The first and longest, is a tale of an English manor house, and relates the dishonorable acts of one part of this "high life" household to the other.

"Robert Browning," by G. K. Chesterton, published by the Macmillan company, is an interesting volume, giving incidents of "Browning in Early Life," "Early Work," "Browning and His Marriage," "Browning in Italy," "Browning in Later Life," "Browning as a Literary Critic," "The Ring and the Book" and "The Philosophy of Browning."

"The Wars of Peace," by A. F. Wilson, is a work in which the author attempts to illustrate the struggle between labor and capital. He does this in an interesting and well-told romance. The heartlessness and the tragedies and sorrows that lie in the wake of a would-be monopoly are skillfully portrayed.

"Florida Fancies," by F. R. Swift, is an entertainingly written record of a mid-winter holiday jaunt in Florida by a busy northerner, who wanted to find out the truth of some of the big alligator, bear and deer stories, and incidentally "to get milder and game so that I could come back and tell bigger ones."

"The Poems and Verses of Charles Dickens," collected and edited with bibliographical notes by F. G. Kitton and published by Harpers, is a volume that includes poems from his novels, lyrics and prologues from his plays and sermons from the Examiner and the Daily News.

"The Care of the Baby," a manual for mothers and nurses, contains practical directions for the management of infancy and childhood in health and disease, by J. P. Grosvenor Smith, M. D. This, the third edition of this manual, has been thoroughly revised.

"The Great Psychological Crime: The Destructive Principle of Nature in Individual Life," by Florence Hummel, and addressed to "The Progressive Intelligence of the Age," is published by the Indo-American Book Company, Chicago. The work is in three parts, "Modern Hypnotism," "Spiritual Mediumship" and "Refractive Justice."

MONEY TO BURN ON FOURTH

Two Millions Will Be Spent for Fireworks and No as Producers.

ANYTHING TO MAKE THE WELKIN RING

All Kinds of Trouble Stored Up in Patriotic Combustibles—Bursting Blazes to Burnish the Starry Heavens.

This Fourth of July we have "money to burn," thanks to the wonderful prosperity that has spread over the country, and Young America is going to burn it with a vengeance.

There is a new kind of firecracker called the "mandarin," which comes in huge packs of 10,000 to 50,000, all connected by a single fuse.

"How Fireworks Are Made." The plant on Staten Island is known as the "Fireworks Farm." It covers a square mile, enclosed by a high board fence to keep out all intruders, and scattered about the place are about 100 buildings of corrugated iron, floored with cement.

The processes used in the manufacture of fireworks are much more simple than most people suppose. Of materials the three that are chief and important are a fine quality of strawboard, an explosive compound consisting of gunpowder, saltpeter and charcoal, and tissue paper.

The beginning of a set piece is a drawing, which is handed over to a carpenter to be reproduced in strips of wood fastened together with glue and nails.

Rockets require more skill in their manufacture than any other kind of fireworks. The pasteboard case must be of a certain diameter in proportion to its length, and the packing has to be performed with the utmost care.

whistling and screaming, and a fusillade to wind up. The "dragon's nest" is something new and startling. It begins with a discharge of stars, each star in its flight separating into a number of smaller ones.

There are even parlor fireworks nowadays, and one of these is the "snake in the grass." When burning it produces a large bunch of grass.
