The Game.

she plays her game with a ready hand And a steady hand and true; She marked her man, When the game began, and she knows nim through and through

Nothing to win, and nothing to lose, And nothing to choose or care! A kiss for the stakes, And if his heart breaks, She is only playing fair.

A saddened fool—and wise!
And the woman won!
The game is done—
Dear God! the look in her eyes!

But ah! Time was ere the woman would,
Ere the woman could, and now
She owes her skill
To the careless will
Of the man who taught her how!

With each week the prospect for the ent indication are that this season will curpass last winter, which was unusually dinner mes fresh promise in the announcement another series of assemblies arranged y Mrs. S. G. Strickland, Mrs. Clement Chase, Mrs. D. H. Wheeler, jr., and Mrs. Charles Kountze. The first will take place at Chambers' academy Monday evening, November 23, Mr. Clement Chase to lead; he second will be December 22, January 14 and February 13 being the other dates. The nembership includes about forty married couples and nearly a score of bachelors.

Dear Society Editor: In your interestball of eight years ago you show a most solicitous discrimination as to recalling tended on that occasion together; you give girls. You give also the names of the men who have died and of the men who are classed as "still eligible." You kindly omit the names of the girls who were there who are still on the waiting list. I assure you we appreciate the favor and thank you ONE OF THE LEFTOVERS.

Omaha hostesses seem to be slow to introduce the custom so prevalent in the east affairs in the middle of the afternoon rather than at the close. This plan has its advantage in more than one respect, chiefly, however, in that it does away with the sufficiently substantial when served late in the afternoon to spoil one's dinner. Berved in the middle of the afternoon, the refreshment is very light and admits of a little relaxation if cards happen to be the en-

And, speaking of refreshments, aside from any consideration of one's health, it is interesting to note to what a large extent eating enters into nearly every sort of entertainment nowadays, regardless of the time, the place or the occasion. After the card game the tables are cleared and a light luncheon served. The kensington afternoon is invariably accompanied with tea and wafers, a salad or ices or something else. After the theater comes the supper. No evening gathering is complete without refreshments, while at the fashionable reception nowadays it is the dining room rather than the reception room upon which special stress is laid, and the hostess who is mindful of the points that make things really smart sees to it that her dining room is in charge of the women who count, that its appointments are perfect. The society editor would correct the mistake in last Sunday's paper in referring to the leap year ball of eight years ago as being given by Miss Himebaugh (Mrs. Arthur Gulou) and Miss Colpetzer (Mrs. Harry Wilkins). The ball was really a subscription affair in which more than a score of of serving the refreshments at afternoon society women had a part and the women named were simply in charge of arrangements.

Mrs. Jear. R. Moore, who has been the salad, ices and other nothings that are guest of Mrs. Chency Cunningham for the last two months, leaves Monday for an extended trip east.

Miss Callanan gave a flinch party in her honor Wednesday evening at the Winona. Saturday afternoon Miss Josephine Alley, assisted by Miss Helen Stephenson, entertained Miss Beacom informally, giving her a picture shower, which is the social technicality for a party where each friend or the honored guest presents that young woman with her photograph.

A large silver bowl of pink cosmos formed the center of the round table, and was surrounded by pink tulle shaded candles in silver holders, while circling about these in a large wreath, pink cosmos and ferns extended around the ta-ble. Suspended from the chandeller above was a ball of fern leaves, that formed a shade for the electric lights. The orchestra played a march while the guests marched down and all were served at round tables in one body, the tables were decorated pink and white carnations and ferns. Dimick's orchestra played a long program of the latest dance music.
