the Moros, which has been a feature of the Philippine situation during the past three weeks, and which followed so closely on the heels of the investigation now going on in the senate committee on military affairs, recalls the splendid record which Captain

John J. Pershing of the Fifteenth cavalry made against the most suspicious people during the campaign of 1902-3. Major General George W. Davis, in his annual report to the War department as to operations in the Division of the Philippines; says of Captain Pershing: "This officer's work as a commander of Camp Vic-ars and in the field deserves special mention. He has displayed rare good judg-ment, infinite patience dealing with these auspicious people, wise foresight in preparing for every emergency and contingencies, and, finally, when nothing remained but to crush the resistance, to so dispose his force as to accomplish the result with the least possible loss." Captain Pershing belongs to the school of American officers who during the past three, years have established, the supremacy of the American arms in the far east. He belongs to the class of Bell, Wint and Jesse Lee, these officers demonstrating beyond question to European military men that whether they be graduates of military or naval schools, or simple volunteers, they are fit to cope with any race or tribe against which they may be thrown.

Necessary to Win Confidence.

Probably no better idea of the Moro character has been given than is set forth in Captain Pershing's report to his superior officers during his year or more amongst then "The Moro is of a peculiar makeup as to character," says Captain Pershing, "though the reason is plain when it is considered, first, that he is a savage; second, that he is a Malay; and third, that he is a Mohammedan, The almost infinite combination of superstitions, prejudices and suspicions blended into his character make him a difficult person to handle until fully understood. In order to control him other than by brute force one must first win his implicit confidence-nor is this as difficult as it would seem; but once accomplished one can accordingly guide and direct his thoughts and actions by patient and con tinued effort. He is jealous of his religion. but he knows very little about its teachings. As long as he is undisturbed in the possession of his women and children and his slaves, there need be little fear from him.

soldler, whose campaign against this peo-ple is, one of the most brilliant of the en-tire Philippine occupation. Captain Persh-ings, has returned from the Philippines, and is now associated with the general staff of the army. The standing of the American army is enriched by having such men as Pershing in it.
