NO RULING ON SALOON CASES Brownlee Divorce Case Takes Up So Much Time They Are Not

Reached by Court. The grinding of the divorce mill in the district court yesterday prevented Judge

Thornell completing the hearing in the saloon injunction cases and consequently they went over until later in the week. Attorney Benjamin, the plaintiff in the injunction suits against the Storz Brewing company's saloon, filed yesterday an answer in which he contended that the plea of abatement raised by Mrs. Maggie Buck, owner of the saloon buildings, on the grounds that the district court lacked jurisdiction by reason of similar suits brought by W. C. Utterback, the intervenor in the Benjamin actions, having been transferred to the federal court. In his answer Benjamin alleges that the actions brought by Utterback last July were not in good faith and that Utterback had no intention of prosecuting them any further and for this reason had intervened in the present sults.

IN

(From a Staff Correspondent.) DES MOINES, Jan. 11.-(Special.)-A business session, with just as little trash in the legislation as possible, is the program for the thirtleth session of the Jowa general assembly which opened today. "He legislates best who legislates least."

declared Speaker Clarke on taking the gavel, and his utterances in favor of a conservative session with nothing but business were loudly applauded.

The day was an ideal winter one, with a gentle snow falling and partially hiding the blackened exterior of a portion of the state capitol, where the fire had done its work. The north wing of the capitol was closed. Workmen are busy clearing away the debris. The legislature was forced to move entire into one end of the capitol and to be crowded together in an uncomfortable way. The senate yielded its splendid chamber to the house and took the judiciary committe rooms, where the members were ranged around tables as if for conference and the secretary and president had only a plain table for work. The house members were in the schate and as there are twice as many representatives as senators there were two at each desk. In this way the legislature was made fairly comfortable for the opening exercises.

It was decided, after organization had been perfected in each house, that a joint session should be held at 10 o'clock Tuesday to hear the governor's message, and at 2 p. m. the vote counting will begin.

The senate was a little slow in getting started, owing to fallure to have the credentials made out in advance. Lieutenant Governor Herriott presided and the officers of the last senate were selected as temporary officers, and later the officers se lected at the republican caucus Saturday were elected permanent officers. Members were sworn in and committees appointed on various matters, such as assigning seats assigning committee rooms, getting badges for doorkeepers, etc. Provision was made for notifying the governor of the desire to hear him in joint session tomorrow with his message and adjournment was taken. House is Prompt.

The house was organized promptly, E. D. Chassell of Plymouth was temporary speaker after the house had been called to order by H. E. Teachout of Polk, senior member from this county. Temporary officers were selected and then George W. Clarke of Dallas was elected speaker unan-Imously.

On taking the gavel Speaker Clarke rendered his thanks to the house for the honor conferred and asked for a business session. He declared that while the fire in the capitol was deplorable it taught the people how much they loved their state institutions. The highest ambition of a member should be to assist in damming up the flood of useless bills which are presented and to aid in preventing the flow of rubbish into the statutes of the state. He believed that if the legislature merely passed the appropriations and a few other matters and adjourned the people of Iowa would be happy, contented and prosperous the next two ars. There was danger of too much legislation, due to a belief that the evils of society may be cured by legislation and that special interests should be aided. 'A short business session would be greatly to their credit. The house caucus nominees were elected as employes and B. F. Cummings of Marshall was selected as speaker pro tem. The last rules were adopted temporarily and committees were appointed on various perfunctory matters, as in the senate, and after the complete organization the house adjourned until tomorrow morning.

The expected has happened and the quarrel between factions as to who shall control the republican city primaries in this city next week has become acute and the present prospect is that there will be two primary elections held and then the courts will be asked to decide all disputed matters. At first one faction had control of the city committee and then the other, and they have alternately passed and rescinded various motions until nobody is able to tell just what has happened. As a result there is a total failure to agree on the management of the primary election and two separate committees will undertake to manage the same.
