"Robinson" at the Boyd. The Bostonians in "Robinson," an opera in three acts, by Reginald De Koven and Harry B. Smith; Samuel L. Studley, musical director. The cast: Sheriff of Nottingham, Joseph Ratcliff; Little John, W. H. MacDonald; Robin Hood, Douglas Kuttner; Will Scarlet, Howard Chambers; Anne-Marie, Laura Massey; Friar Tuck, George B. Frothingham; Guy of Gisborne, Campbell Donald; Dame Pucelle, Blanche Morrison; Maid Marian, Agnes Brown.

Fifteen years ago the Bostonians brought us "Robinson," and again and again have they come with the same offering, and each time the theater has been packed with people who revel in its beauties of melody and mirth, its wealth of song and laughter, and rejoice that they are permitted to do so. Most of us know the opera as well as Director Studley, or any of the principals. Not a note comes to us in song or score, but we know it was coming; every word is as familiar to us as our names, and yet we are not tired of it. Why? Because it is good; it is the one thing America has contributed to the light opera stage that is worthy a place in the list that we want to see go down to posterity as representative of the things we have done. It has all the features that are desirable in a light opera, and if it has any faults, sixteen hundred and fifty-four repetitions of the piece in public have failed to disclose them. It is a perfect work of its kind. It matters not that the personnel of the company changes from season to season; the music is the same, and the sentiment is there, the melody and the wit, the love-song and the lulling lyric, and the genuine humor, as well as the hearty, clean and wholesome, even in the tipyness of the High Sheriff of Nottingham and the fervor of Friar Tuck, who leads the roundelay in which he sings "Oh, dam—oh, damsel fair." And all these things are very well sung last night. Mr. Ratcliff proved himself again a most acceptable substitute for dear old Barnabas, singing with taste and carrying on in a manner quite funny. Mr. MacDonald was in excellent voice, and his "Brown October Ale" was never better rendered. Mr. Chamber's big bass and Mr. Kuttner's splendid tenor did excellent service in the well known solos that are scored for their parts, and in the ensemble work their voices blended perfectly, each supplementing the other to produce the desired effect that is so pleasing. Miss Brown, the new prima donna of the company, has a remarkably sweet voice, that is particularly pure in its upper register, and she uses it most effectively. It is not so powerful as one might wish, but its quality in a large measure compensates for the deficiency in quantity. Miss Condon found more work to do as Annadale than as Dolores, and is quite acceptable in the role. Her voice is not robust, but has a mellowness of tone that is most desirable in contrast, and "Oh, Promise Me," and "St. Swithin's Chimes" were splendidly sung by her. The chorus work is excellent, although the body is not so large, numerically, as with which the Bostonians have come west.

It is an actual fact that Philadelphia has 40,000 more houses than all of Greater New York, and yet New York has nearly three times the population.

Every few years Philadelphia has a natural increase in population that would make a small city of 100,000 people, and if you can conceive the amount of space a city of this size takes up, you can have some idea of the suburbs that must be added every year to Philadelphia to furnish homes for this rapidly increasing population.
