

MAJOR DAVIS FOUND DEAD

Body Discovered in Ditch Yesterday is Identified by Son. VETERAN SOLDIER AND LAWYER A SUICIDE

Takes Strychnine and Lies Down Beside the Track in Union Pacific Yards to Wait for Death. The body of the man found Friday afternoon near the Union Pacific tracks west of the Krug brewery and between the Boulevard and Summit bridges was identified last night by Douglas Davis of 215 Ohio street as that of his father, Major James W. Davis, a government meat inspector in the packing houses, and living at 478 North Twenty-fourth street.

A partially emptied vial of strychnine was found beside the body and going on this fact the coroner's jury which held an inquest last night gave it as its opinion that the deceased came to his death by strychnine poisoning, administered by his own hand. The news of the death came as a thunderbolt to the dead man's relations and friends and they can give no reason for the act. Major Davis has been a resident of Omaha for thirty-seven years and has held the post of government meat inspector for the past eleven. He was a major in the Forty-ninth Illinois regiment during the civil war and previous to holding his present position, he was a member of the law firm of Davis & Fritter in Omaha. He was 76 years old and leaves a wife and one son.

Last Seen by Relatives. He was last seen by his relations on Tuesday morning, when he left for his work, but his nonappearance did not cause any apprehension, as he was in the habit of frequently absenting himself from home for days at a time. The railroad switchman nearby said he saw the old man walking aimlessly in the vicinity where he met his death three days ago. Mr. D. Davis, the son, said that his father often walked about the tracks and that he had often warned him to be careful. The body was found in a gully covered with mud and dirt and bore evidence that it had laid there for a couple of days. So badly was it disfigured that Detective Baldwin, who had the deceased well and who went to the scene of the death when the matter was reported to the police, was unable to recognize it. The late rains had washed the mud from the gully on it, almost entirely burying it, and had there been another rain before the body was discovered it is probable that it would never have been found. The strychnine vial bore the label of a New York druggist. The funeral will take place from the residence on Sunday, but the full details will be made later. Brailey & Dorrance have charge of the remains.

SALOON HOLDUPS ARE ACTIVE

Secure Eighty Dollars in Cash and Two Glasses of Beer. Sam Christiansen, a saloonkeeper at 2515 Cumming street, felt mighty glad last night that the warm weather had set in, for two men tickled his nose with the ends of two horribly big guns and recommended the loebax as a nice place to pass the night in. The holdups entered the saloon at 11:45, just prior to closing up time, and called for two glasses of beer, which were set before them. Christiansen did not see anything suspicious in the men coming for beer and turned his back on them. When he turned around again he was looking into two 4s, and his hands shot up in the air. It was then the loebax was proposed for a bed and Christiansen crawled in. The men went through the cash register, but having only obtained a few dollars told Christiansen to come forth and dig up. The saloonkeeper vowed he was a poor man and the money he saw in their hands was all he had. The men spoke of funerals and graveyards and pressed the guns a little tighter against Christiansen's head. Christiansen then handed over and gave up the roll and the two men departed $80 to the good, to say nothing of the two beers they leisurely drank before they left and which they forgot to pay for. Neither of the men wore masks and the police have a good description of them.

Disorderly Boys Arrested.

Charles Clausen of 108 Burt street and Mike Morrison of 151 Burt street, two boys who had been visiting the street railway power house, were arrested last night while they were passing insulting remarks to the workmen. The boys were chased by the boys and offered the workmen target for stones, with which the boys retaliated. He rescued with the help of another on the arm. The boys were taken to the police station, charged with disorderly conduct.

AT THE PLAYHOUSES.

"Pagliacci" and "Cavalleria Rusticana" at the Boyd. Production of the operas of Leoncavalla and Mascagni under the direction of Rose Cecilia Shay. The casts: "PAGLIACCI" Carlo.....James Stevens Tomio.....William Stephens Silvio.....James Stevens Nedda.....Mary Carrington "CAVALLERIA RUSTICANA" Turridu.....Joseph Fredericks Also.....Hattie Belle Ladd Santuzza.....Mabel Kiar

The double bill at the Boyd's last night, "Pagliacci" and "Cavalleria Rusticana," drew a good sized audience. Both of the operas are very difficult music, and both demand the highest quality of dramatic ability. "Pagliacci" is a particularly difficult work, owing to the sudden modulations, the tempo and the entirely uncompanionable nature of Leoncavalla's composition. Neither chorus or orchestra showed to particular advantage. Francis Carrington in the part of Tomio had to exhibit a height of tragic excitement which is probably possible even in the home of the opera, but which draws little sympathy from the northern audience. He compelled applause for his good work. Miss Shay was to have appeared in Mascagni's one act opera, but her voice did not permit. Miss Mary Carrington took her role immediately, bringing the exacting music of Nedda in the first piece, and sang both and acted both splendidly. She showed, however, a trace of the double work she has been doing because of Miss Shay's indisposition. In the comedy of the first piece the comedy of the flower which wears a comedy to their stage audience and in reality so savage a tragedy, her assumed gaiety with the terror and the defiance showing through was indeed very well done. Mr. Stevens sang well as usual in the part of the rejected clown Silvio, and as the husband of Nedda, "Cavalleria Rusticana" was effective from all points of consideration. The small chorus sang the second opera well, rising to the climaxes with fine volume and truthfulness of tone. Joseph Fredericks in Turridu had a part better suited to his voice than in some of the other pieces.

WORK OF SALVATION ARMY Commander Booth-Tucker Lectures on the Undertaking of His Organization. An audience that crowded Crichton hall to an unpleasant degree heard Commander Booth-Tucker, head of the Salvation Army, deliver his lecture, "Love and Honor," Friday. The discourse is an explanation of the work of the army, illustrated by stereopticon views and the familiar songs sung in the familiar way. Particular emphasis is placed upon scenes among the farm colonies recently taken up as a new branch of work. This feature is now being dilated upon by the commander at every opportunity, and he used his best endeavors last night to convince his auditors that life on a small farm, which in time becomes the property of the tenant, is far better, easier and more comfortable than earning wages and living in stuffy apartments in the crowded city. At his request, the audience voted unanimously in favor of a resolution which the commander read which urges congress to pass a "colonization bill," of which he is the sponsor. This act proposes to open a colonization bureau and to enable poor men to come into possession of the unused lands of the west by means of loans from the government. "The government did not have to build all the railroads," said the commander, "but it had to construct a few of the first ones. Then private capital took hold. So we hope to interest men with money in our schemes. The farm colonies have proven themselves so practical and capable of so much profit that we think all that is needed to enable any poor man who wants a home to get one is to give the movement a good start. New Zealand has found it could trust its workmen and has loaned them more than $18,000,000, not one penny of which has been lost. The United States will find it can trust its workmen, once it tries it."

Aside from the photographs of the farm colonies in Colorado and Kansas, pictures of various industrial homes, hotels and refugees were cast upon the screen, together with views of the army at work and some of the subjects of its aims. Particularly interesting were those which showed how the army labor drifts in the cities in order to collect the refuse material, such as paper, garbage and the like. The stuff after being gathered is rendered marketable for different purposes and sold for enough to pay the cost of collection.

TREES, FLOWERS AND BIRDS

Base of the Celebration of Arbor Day at the Clifton Hill School. Miss Mason and her assistants at the Clifton Hill school are ardent supporters of the nature work outlined in the course of study, and the Arbor day exercises were planned to show the visiting parents a different grade in the study of vegetables, birds, flowers and trees. There being no assembly room, the program was progressive, the guests starting in the kindergarten and ending with the highest grade, where the classes finished their exercises by planting a strong young elm tree, a gift from Dr. F. O. Petersen, the friend and physician of a number of the pupils. Evidence of the spring awakening were to be seen in every room. Drawings and cuttings of the birds, trees, flowers and vegetables decorated the walls and windows and tables were filled with plants in different stages of growth. Out of doors a fine tulip bed gives promise of a blaze of glory later on and a long trench of sweet peas awaits nature's call. The beds for later flowers have been fertilized and spaded and the vegetable gardens plowed and harrowed. Bird houses are in the trees and teachers and pupils are justly proud of the fact that robin, meadow lark, blue bird, wrens visit without cause for fear the grounds and neighborhood of Clifton Hill school.

CROWD OUT TO HEAR MORGAN

First Methodist Church Jammed by People Anxious to Listen. UNDERSTANDING NECESSARY TO BELIEVE Theme Based on Thought that Professors of Christianity Do Not Comprehend What They Accept as Religion. The First Methodist church was packed to its doors last night with people who had gone to hear Rev. G. Campbell Morgan speak. A number were unable to find seats and had to utilize the windowills, and even then about 150 were lined up against the walls. The speaker took as his text the following verse from 1 Peter, II, 2: "Ye are an elect race, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, and ye are to be a people unto three parts, the principle, power and purpose of the church."

"The principle of the church," said he, "is found in the text, 'Ye are what ye may,' the purpose is 'to show forth the excellencies of Him who has called you from darkness unto light,' and the power lies in the fact that 'Ye are an elect race, a royal priesthood, a holy nation.'"

"The Christian church is a race, not a club or organization, not a mere gathering of men and women of a common sentiment. Every man is kin to every other man in the church. It is not an elect race. I often think that the danger to the church lies not in the church, but at the door of the church; there is too much laxity in allowing members to become one of the elect race. Again and again I have found that many who have entered the church have done so with only a knowledge of what they were becoming, they embrace Christianity because their fathers did. And how are these people expected to 'show forth the excellencies of Him who has called them from darkness unto light,' when they themselves are still in the dark?"

Religion Not Understood. "We speak of a Christian nation, because Christianity is the predominating note of the nation, but I tell you I have seen more feithfulness in Western London with its cultured indifference and vengeer and polish than what I would expect to find in Central Africa. I speak of London because I know it, but I never forget the fact that you are the least of the nations. And their peculiar fetish is this book, the Bible. They worship it and regard it sacred without knowing anything about it. They have that horrible mockery of Lent, fasting for forty days in remembrance of the Christ, and the moment the allotted time is past dropping it as a thing of no account. They are a people of the life of riot and sin with renewed vigor. "Then the royal priesthood. When a person tells you that he is priest he means that through office conferred he can get to God in a way in which you cannot. The right of access to God is based on our relation to God as a king, a prince, a son of God you are then a royal priest. In ending I wish to refer to some advice given by Martin Luther to those preaching, when he said, 'Let your congregation go away bearing in mind something in particular of last night to convince his auditors that life on a small farm, which in time becomes the property of the tenant, is far better, easier and more comfortable than earning wages and living in stuffy apartments in the crowded city. At his request, the audience voted unanimously in favor of a resolution which the commander read which urges congress to pass a "colonization bill," of which he is the sponsor.
