A report has been received from Dr. Clarke, the government scab expert, who investigated conditions in Weston county, scables in the entire county. The M. Riordan sheep have been scabby since December, but the infected flock is now in close quarantine, and as all flocks that came in contact with the Riordan sheep, or in any way were endangered, have been dipped twice and three times, there is very little probability that the disease will spread. The request upon the state board that the whole county be quarantined was made by the flockmasters themselves, who were greatly alarmed over the situation and feared that all flocks would become infected. They believed a general quarantine would be the most effective step to take to quickly eradicate the disease.
