

SEAVEY'S MEMORY NOT VIVID

Ex-Chief of Police Takes Witness Stand in the Denison Case.

PINKERTON AND POLLOCK DEPOSITIONS

Seavey Tells of Meeting Mahoney, Thomas and Brown, Then Refreshing Mind on Case from Newspaper Files Before Testifying.

The hearing of the application for the Denison writ of habeas corpus was resumed yesterday in the district court before Judges Troup, Day and Redick and occupied the entire forenoon session of the court.

The testimony of former Chief of Police Seavey was mainly of a negative character. He said that the best of his recollection the Pollock case was under his direction while he was chief here, but to the best of his memory he did not believe he heard the name of Denison used in connection with the case until some weeks after the robbery.

At examination Seavey testified that he had no recollection of Assistant Superintendent Weber of the Kansas City police forces saying anything about Denison during Weber's stay in Omaha for two weeks after the robbery; neither did he remember saying anything to Sergeant Ormsby on the day after the robbery about watching Denison; neither did he think Denison's name was in the report made on the case by Ormsby.

In substance Seavey confirmed on the witness stand a statement he admitted making during the conversation of last week at the Grand Hotel in Council Bluffs, namely, that he thought he would make a poor witness in the case.

The deposition of William G. Pollock, taken before John E. Money, notary public, in the office of James H. McIntosh, New York City, was read to the court. In the deposition Pollock states he knew Denison before the time of the robbery well enough to call him by his first name. Pollock's robbery and assault are described in detail and as already reported. Pollock deposes that on the day of the robbery he met Denison and others at Sonnenberg's pawn shop.

Pollock represented to identify Bruce, who had been arrested, but the man was too small of stature and was not recognized by Pollock as the man who made the assault and robbery, so the deposition reads.

The deposition of William A. Pinkerton begins in a formal way, with a particular bearing on the Denison case in the first part of the document. The deposition states that for years the Pinkerton agency has performed detective services for the Jewellers Protective union, at the request of which union Assistant Superintendent Clayton M. Weber of the Kansas City branch was detailed on the case. The Pinkerton deposition covers but two pages, the only vital part of which is as follows:

Question—You may state if you know when it was that your agency first associated or suspected that Denison of Omaha with having planned or having been connected with the Pollock robbery.

Answer—So far as I know, the first intimation of that came to me on receiving Weber's reports detailing the facts in regard to the robbery. At the time of the robbery I was in the west at Denver and from there went to Portland, Ore. On November 18, 1892, a summary of Weber's first reports reached me at Portland, and I then called attention by letter to some previous information that I had heard of concerning Denison and directed that an especial watch be put over him. This, as far as I am aware, is the first time particular attention was called to Denison by our agency.

USUAL RUSH FOR HARVESTERS

Demand Greater Than Supply, but Unique Plans Are Made.

ROTARY SYSTEM WILL BE PUT IN USE. As Soon as Southwest is Through with Men They Will Be Sent North to Help Out There.

The annual cry for harvest hands is now going up from the Oklahoma and Kansas fields, and there appear to be as much of a shortage in the supply of laborers to garner the crops as ever.

Learning from experience of the years past the labor commissioners of the various western states have organized a bureau for the purpose of furnishing information to where laborers are most needed. It is the plan of the bureau to place laborers in the south early in the season and as the harvest advances north to move them as they are needed.

Hayward and Hutter are part and parcel of Water Moses & Co., represented by Ignatius Jehovah Dunn.

The defendants were charged with using a representation of the flag on labels, neckbands and cork tops, placed on bottled beer of a certain brand, virtually using the flag for advertising purposes.

The defendants will appeal the case to the supreme court, maintaining that the section of the statute referred to is unconstitutional and that the trade mark was authorized at Washington, before the passage of section 775, mentioned above.
