ROUSING RALLY AT RED

Voters Are Urged to Judge the Parties by Their Fruits-Effect of Policy of Protection in Filling the Treasury Pointed Out,

RED CLOUD, Neb., Sept. 24.-(Special Telegram.)-The weather was propitious all day for the big republican meeting at Rei Cloud, to which the names of Speaker Joseph G. Cannon and Hon. James E. Watson of Indiana proved to be a strong lodestone. Enthusiasm was manifested early in the day, when hundreds of farmers and and neighboring towns congregated on the streets to await the speaking, which took place at the court house grove at 1:30. The thoroughfares were liberally deccandidate for secretary of state. Mr. Cannon was accompanied by C. F. Cather of Fruits of Protection.

During the morning Mr. Cannon entertained the Franklin county delegation, among whom were I. E. Montgomery, C. Haber and A. Hadden. Escorted by the Swiss band from Guide Rock the reception committee, among whom were A. Galusha, E. N. Searle and C. F. Cather, the distinguished guest and party, composed of Governor Mickey, Congressman Norris, Congressman Watson of Indiana and representative republicans of Webster county, arrived at the courthouse square, where a decorated pavillon and seats had been erected. After a song by a male quartet Chairman Cather introduced Joseph G. Cannon. The speaker was in excellent voice and spoke clearly from the beginning. He began by assigning to each man the right of his own convictions, providing in arriving at conclusions he remembered that "by their fruits ye shall know them." "Judged thus," proceeded the speaker, "we find that because of the first plank in the republican platform in the time of Lincoln nearly one-half or our brethren went out of the union and left a depleted treasury; but by the principle of protection as carried out by the republicans we have a full treasury and are a wealthy people from Maine to the Golden Gate. Mr. Montgomery, chairman of the county central ommittee, introduced Mr. Cannon to the

Taking this for his text he gave them an object lesson in political economy. years of democratic free trade, left an empty treasury; how the republican party inaugurated the policy of protection; how from that time on the conditions improved; how factories started up, giving employment at good wages to millions of workingmen, who in turn were enabled to buy the products of the farmer; how thus the farmer, having a home market, sold his products at home at good prices and in return was enabled to buy the comforts of life, making more work for the working-man, thus one helping the other until America had for forty-four years enjoyed an unprecedented prosperity, interrupted only for four years when, under Cleveland's second administration, the democrats had full control of the government. When Work Was Scarce. Drawing attention back to these days he called the time when 3,000,00 men tramped the land in search of work, unable to buy the product of the farmer; how prices of products fell to before war prices. He vividly described the suffering of those days. Then, starting with the inaugura-tion of McKinley, he showed how the spei cint session repealed the Wilson bill and wrote protection on the statute books; how from that very moment factories started up again, paying living wages to all who wanted to work; how this again created a nome market for farm products and brought about the prosperity we now enjoy. With earnest eloquence he warned the people not to change the present policy to one from which experience taught that nothing but ruin was to be expected. He spoke a few kind words for Congressman Norris, pointing out the necessity of electing a republican congress and senate to help President Roosevelt carry out the progressive policy of the republican plat-
