CONDITIONS IN OUR SCHOOLS

Conclusions of a Trained Investigator of the Public School System.
CHANGES THAT WOULD IMPROVE THEM
Better Teachers, More Money and Able School Boards the Needs of the Hour—An Instructive Review.
The examination of the public schools in various parts of the United States which Miss Adele Marie Shaw has been conducting for World's Work is ended in the November number of that magazine with her general conclusions under the title, "How Successful Are the Public Schools?" Miss Shaw says:
"Physically, the results are meager. A careful of people in city or country will prove it. One needs no physician's certificate to see the signs of disease due to ignorance. They are depressing, even of a feverish, frequent. One sound, firm, well proportioned, clean skinned, genuinely cheerful human being rivets the eyes of a whole crowd. Mentally, the showing is hardly less meager. The measure of mental training is the power to reason. If the graduates of public schools had learned to reason, they would not be gulled over and over by the same lying advertisements; they would not be the readiest dupes of yellow journalism, there would be more conversation and less drivel; imagination would make simple and inexpensive pleasures more acceptable. The final touchstone of decision would not be immediate personal pleasure, and there would be less living from hand to mouth, more thought of the future. Morally, the school showing is poorer still. There are, of course, great cities, by any influences that suggest the getting of money without work. The schools do not counteract these influences as they might."
Causes of the Failure.
One of the principal and important causes that retard the full development of the schools is found by Miss Shaw to be the careless selection of teachers:
"No one who knows the public schools denies that the teachers are overworked and underpaid. They should receive higher salaries. At the same time, some normal schools that I have visited should put less into notebooks and more into trained intellect and character, and neither bribery, lent is more often political preferment than money, the boards are still unequal to their task. I have come across instances after instances where good educators and disinterested men were crowded off the school board and replaced by politicians of an unworthy class."

Good Influence at Work.
All of Miss Shaw's conclusions, however, are not so pessimistic as those recorded above.
"In Philadelphia the school city was training children to voluntary obedience to laws they themselves enacted; adjustment to school relations, and responsibility for a share in the existing order, were educating active, not negative, characters. In nearly every state that I visited, the Audubon society was an active agent in teaching the manliness that is civility. In Maine, the Young Citizen's League, working with the school authorities had brought about, among other things, a vast difference in the care and treatment of animals in country towns. In many places good boys were growing more accessible to school children; from mine to the far west traveling libraries were multiplying. State reading circles, school bureaus, special associations, were offering books at nominal prices. Teachers were using better material. Vulgar and commonplace stories were replaced by the good literature of the Humane Education society of Rhode Island, by the best magazines, by the best authors. Even commonplace songs were, in a few instances, making way for better ones."
Need for Good Teaching.
The greatest obstacle appearing to be in popular ignorance or indifference "to the necessity of securing and paying for the best teaching."
"Modern days, when they are properly taught, are merely common sense in the school room, the use of material hitherto wasted, by which children are given the practical control of their powers. They cost effort, time, money. That is the reason why one child has a good education in American public schools for ten thousand that have a poor education. Our very attempts to improve the schools have often the opposite effect. Instead of enfranchising women teachers and taking them out of the power of the politicians, we are putting in more men, because they are men. The best schools must employ the best candidate, man or woman. Instead of training brain and hand to their best efforts, we are in some places arbitrarily filling boys for this and girls for that. The result is a poorer equipment for work. The ignorant man who is satisfied with the public school system of the United States; and a very ignorant man who is not proud of it."

LASSITUDE OF THE TROPICS

Strenuous Northerners Fight in Vain Against the Dopy Feeling.
FASCINATION OF BEING UTTERLY LAZY
Victory of the Noon Siesta Over a Hasting American—Not a Matter of Climate Altogether.
"A man from these latitudes might as well attempt to brush back a tidal wave with a whisk broom as to fight the lassitude of the tropics," remarked a young New Yorker who recently returned here for a visit after five years spent on a coffee plantation in Guatemala.
This young New Yorker used to be noted among his friends here as a hustler. He walked with a springy step and was always on the jump. His alertness was so pronounced that he seemed almost nervous. He always appeared to be going somewhere in a big hurry.
His friends instantly noted the difference in him when he got back from his long stay in Guatemala. His health was all right. He had taken good care of himself down there and, as he had been living on the uplands, Creeping Johnny, which is another name for the Chagres fever, hadn't got him.
But he had become slow gaited, and his old running mates here observed that a peasant he had for sitting down. A dreamy expression had taken the place of the sharp look in his eyes. He spoke twice as slowly as before he went down to Central America, and a pained expression crossed his features when he saw any of his friends hurrying.

His friends, in grief, told him that he had become dopy.
"I don't mind you fellows calling me a dopy," was his reply to these remarks. "I am a dopy. I don't suppose that I'd ever be anything else now, even if I stayed back here, which I don't intend doing. The dopy life is pretty good, after all, and I'm going back to Guatemala as soon as I look all the folks over."
"I'd heard a lot about the enervation of the tropics before I went down there and bought an interest in my cousin's coffee plantation, but I didn't take much stock in these stories."
"Backing the Dope.
"Tropics or no tropics, I'm not going to become any dopy," said I to myself on my way down there. "A little matter of climate isn't going to change a fellow's habits so much as all these yarns tell about. When I get down there I'm going to keep a swift move on and beat out this pipe dream about the enervation of the tropics. Watch me!"
"So you see, I went down prepared to fight the thing. Looking back now, I can see what a badly mistaken I made of myself in the view of my cousin-partner during the first few months.
"He went there from Chicago, and he used to be a good deal of a hustler himself. He was a whole lot indisposed to exert himself any more than absolutely necessary when I found him, however, and, of course, I slumped in and reproved him for it. I told him that he'd become a first-rate imitation of the extinct species known as the moth, and all that.
"His only grin and blew smoke rings at me.
" 'That's all right, Buddy,' he'd reply. 'You just wait, that's all. You'll get yours.'
"Then he'd turn over on his sitting-room couch and blow smoke at the wall, as if talking was too much like work.
" 'Well, I was busy lazy all right—for all of a month, perhaps two months. I declared against the midday siesta from my first day, although everybody down there, including the plantation hands, knocks off and does a full length sprawl for three hours at the height of the day. I told my cousin that this siesta business was silly, and was just a disgusting.
" 'He didn't hear me, though, for he was half asleep before I'd got through telling him. I clattered around the house and sheds and made enough noise during the siesta period to keep anything but a bunch of chloroformed men awake, but they never woke up. They just let me clatter and be dinged.

Nerve that Failed.
" 'At first, I used to be working like a dog on his couch and grin at me when he was emerging from his siesta, but he wouldn't say much, except to tell me that I might as well be gay so long as I felt that way.'
" 'I inaugurated the rule for myself that I'd dress for dinner every day, no matter how tired I felt.
" 'There's no use in a fellow letting himself get into my system. I'm not a dog just because he's made a change of base to the tropics; was my way of putting it to my cousin in establishing the dressing for dinner rule for myself, and then he chuckled and told me to go as far as I liked—peaches were good enough for him to eat in so long as there were no guests.
" 'For the first month or so I rode regularly every week the thirty miles to the coast town to see the Pacific Mail liner drop in at the harbor and to take a look at the passengers. This, too, amused my cousin a great deal.
" 'I used to do that when I first came down,' he told me. 'Liked to catch the glint of the sapphire sea, and all that. Bully up here, s'cuse I could look it over once in a while.'
" 'If you like it so much,' I said to him impatiently, 'why don't you get astride of the motor to see the Pacific Mail liner drop in from San Francisco tomorrow?'
" 'I'm too tired,' he replied, and then he went to sleep on my hands before I could get an argument out of him.
" 'Then, gradually after the first month or so, I began to flicker and wobble. I cut out the ride to the coast to meet the steamer, trying to convince myself that I was too busy.
" 'Then I gradually fanned myself out of the notion of dressing for dinner. To get away with this without appearing to crawl in the eyes of my cousin, I pretended to sulk over the fact that he wouldn't dress for dinner except to continue looking like a slouch at the meal of the day.' I told him, 'what's the use of my trying to keep on throwing an aroma of civilization over this plant?'
" 'That was a cheap way of getting out of it, but, for a fact, the dressing-for-dinner business began to get mighty tiresome.
" 'Just when at the approach of the siesta I had the desire to stretch myself out—the temple of all the others of course had a tremendous apoplectic effect—began to steal over me, I fought it tooth and nail—for all of a week after the feeling hit me, I reckon.

" 'I'll be blamed if I'll rest,' I said to myself, trying to get my teeth down on the proposition. 'That would be too ignominious flabby. I'll just load up on strong coffee and fight this infernal desire to lounge around like the rest of these doperies.'
" 'But it was no go. The tropics were getting into my system.
" 'My health and appetite remained fine, but the lassitude was getting me, all the same. One day, at the beginning of the siesta hour, when the whole outfit had knocked off and spread themselves out for getting into my system.
" 'I accumulated, and I was myself on some cart, riage robes out in the wagon house, and I slept for three straight hours. Most gorgeous sleep I ever had in my life.
" 'After that I sneaked a couch out to the big airy, comfortable loft of the implement house. s'cuse I could have my siesta there every day—wanted to keep it under cover from my cousin, though. I was determined that if I was weak enough to siesta, he should never know of it. But the cues had his suspicions, and one day he remained awake a purpose to slink out to the toolhouse, where he found me sprawling out on my couch snoring.
" ' 'You might as well fetch that couch into the house, old man, and enjoy your siesta right,' he said to me that evening, with a grin, and then I saw that that was all off.
" 'If shamelessly indulged in the siesta every day after that, and inside of another two months I was doing all of the hopelessly dopy stunts of my cousin-partner—drumming on the wall with my foot, for example, when lying on the couch, to summon one of the house boys up to bring me a match with which to light my cigarette, and so on.
" 'It wasn't the heat. Our plantation's no hotter than New York at the hottest season, and we have to sleep under coverings the year round, for we're on the side of a mountain and the air blows up after sundown every night. Not the heat—just the tropics, that's all.
" 'No way of accounting for it, except, perhaps, the force of example, which can't account for it fully. I'll bet the first man from these latitudes that ever battled into the tropics experienced the same feeling of lassitude, without the force of the examples of men from their own climate region at that.
" 'And I like it. I love to loil. I've become a scabbi-born loller. Glad I'm going back presently. I wouldn't be as busy as you idiots try to make yourself appear to be for something pretty. I want to always be lolly and lassitudinous.'—New York Sun.
