ductory remarks and President Roosevelt delivered his oration.

As a nation we have had our full share of great men, but the two men of preseminent greatness who, as the centuries go on, will surely loom above all others are Washington and Lincoln; and it is peculiarly fitting that their birthdays should be celebrated every year and the meaning of their lives brought home close to us.

One hundred and eight years ago, just before he left the presidency, he issued his farewell address, and in it he laid down certain principles which he believed should guide the citizens of this republic for all time to come, his own words being, "which appear to me all important to the lowest form or the cell the trichina spiralio; Agnet of Garfield; Osler, considers the trichina spiralio; Agnet of Garfield; Osler, con The president said:

Washington's Methods Practical. Washington, though in some ways an even greater man than Lincoln, did not have Lincoln's wonderful gift of expression—that gift which makes certain speeches of the rail-splitter from Illinois murder, for which he will be tried next month.

Polk Wells, who was at one time a member of the James gang and as a desperado was second only to the James and Younger brothers, was sent to the peniter, lary in this place in the spring of 1882 and remained in prison until his death, which occurred a few years ago. The story of his capture by Dan Farrell, then a citizen of Glenwood, has been told many times. It was a fierce and bloody hand-to-hand conflict between the officer and the desperate bandit, but the officer won.

At the time Wells robbed the bank at Riverton, a small town near Sidney, he was fired upon and wounded by Thomason, who is still a leading citizen of Riverton.

Justice and Benevolence.

Again Wasnington said: "Give to manking the example of a people always guided by an exaited justice and benevolence." This feeling can be shown alike by our dealings within and without our own borders. Tait and Wright in the Philippines and Wood in Cuba gave shown us exactly how to practice this justice and benevolence in dealing with other people—a justice and benevolence which can be shown, not by shirking our duty and abandoning to self-destruction those unfit to govern themselves, but by doing our duty by staying with them and teaching them how to govern themselves, by uplifting them spiritually and materially. Here at home we are obeying this maxim of Washington's just so far as we help in every movement, whether undertaken by the government, or as is, and should be, more often the case, by voluntary action among private citizens, for the betterment of our own people. Observe that Washington speaks both of justice and benevolence, and that he puts justice first. We must be generous, we must help our poorer brother, but above all we must remember to be just; and the first step, toward securing justice is to treat every man on his worth as a man, showing him no special favor, but so far as may be holding open for him the door of opportunity so that reward may wait upon honest and intelligent endeavor.

Again Washington said, "Cherish public credit." Just at the moment there is no attack on public credit, but if ever the temptation arises again let our people at the outset remember that the worst, because the most insidious, form of the appeal that which would persuade him that it is anything but dishonest for him to repudiate his debts.

Finally, it is peculiarly appropriate, when Justice and Benevolence.

Necessity for Education.

Necessity for Education.

Finally, it is peculiarly appropriate, when I have come to this city as the guest of the University of Pennsylvania, to quote another of Washington's maxima: "Promote, as an object of primary importance, institutions for the general diffusion of knowledge. In proportion as the structure of a government gives force to public opinion, it is essential that public opinion should be enlightened." Education may not make a man a good citizen, but most certainly ignorance tends to prevent his being a good citizen. Washington was far too much of a patriot, had far too much love for his fellow citizens, to try to teach them that they could govern themselves unless they could develop a sound and enlightened public opinion. No nation can permanently retain free government unless it can retain a high average of citizenship; and there can be no such high average of citizenship without a high average of citizenship without a high average of the soul as well as the things of the mind. School education can never supplant or take the place of self-education, still less can it in any way take the place of those rugged and manily qualities which we group together under the name of character; but it can be of enormous use in supplementing both.

The men who, founded this nation had to deal with theories of government and the fundamental principles of free institutions. We are now concerned with a different set of questions, for the republic has been firmly established, its principles thoroughly tested and fully approved. To merely political issues have succeeded those of grave social and economic importance, the solution of which demands the best efforts of the best men. We have a right to expect that a wise and leading part in the effort to attain this solution will be taken by those who have been exceptionally blessed in the matter of obtaining an education. That college graduate is but a poor creature who does not feel when he has left college that he has received something for which he owes a return. What he thus owes he can as a rule only pay by the way he bears himself throughout life.

> SOMETHING ABOUT THE UNIVERSITY Pennsylvania an Old and Honored

Institution. The University of Pennsylvania dates its rigin more than 150 years ago. It was founded in 1749 by Benjamin Franklin. It is situated on the west side of the Schuylkill river in West Philadelphia, over the Chestnut street bridge, about a half-hour's walk to the heart of the city proper. It occupies many acres of ground and is a city in itself of beautiful buildings. There are some twenty-five, including hospitals and dormitories, mostly built of a beautiful green stone indigenous to Pennsylvania, comprising every science and art. In connection with its campus is the Franklin field and gymnasium, with its amphitheater -a seating capacity larger than any in this country. Here are contested the intercollegiate games among the eastern colleges, especially foot ball. The medical department was founded in 1765 by Dr. Benjamin Rush and antedates all colleges in the western hemisphere. It is the parent school.

Many illustrious names are connected with one or other of the departments of the university. Franklin, the statesman and printer of revolutionary times; Priestly, the discoverer of oxygen, was a docent in chemistry; Washington was a patron and an LL D. of the university. In the early days of Philadelphia Dr. Benjamin Rush was considered in America the greatest physician of his time. Leidy, the great anatomist and discoverer of the amoeba, the lowest form or the cell of life and of the trichina spiralio; Agnew, the surgeon of Garfield; Osler, considered the greatest physician of his day, was a professor, and back connected in some way with the prog-

In Boston, where Ysaye played in a recent orchestral concert, and where there is a surfeit of artists in all departments of music, a very high authority writes that "his work is superlatively fine and he stirs the soul at all times, for he is an adept when St. Saens and Mozart are to be performed. His technic is forgotten and his subjective self rises into dominance. His song lingers with one long after it is over, for Ysaye is the man of genius. He makes no display, but fulfills his mission, and hears his message with beautiful humility. Of the 'Kreutzer' sonata Ysaye played the marvellous work, bristling as it is with difficulties, with an ease and smoothness and power that was entrancing and with a beauty of style that breathed the very spirit of Beethoven and seemed he came to Omaha. He believes he can ther discussion at the next meeting, when the last expression of musical art. He plays a new and interesting life in the Bruch concerto, of the 'Abendlied.'
