Countless others never go farther than the fireside of those who are left behind to mourn the loss of the missing ones. A short time ago a brave-hearted seafaring man died in the suburbs of Philadelphia—died of a broken heart, it was freely said by those broken heart, it was freely said by those who knew him best. Nearly three decades who knew him best. Nearly three decades before his curly headed boy, the apple of his eye, had mysteriously disappeared. A careful search failed to discover him. Money, time, energy, everything that could be offered up was freely sacrificed in a ceaseless endeavor to learn of the whereabouts of the boy; but all in vain. The fabre searched the four corners of the earth, only to meet with repeated and never ending disappointment. The Charley Ross case—for to such is reference made—created a great sensation in its day and hour; but now similar disappearances are part of the gally, weekly and monthly reports of the server in a weak voice and in abbreviated.

"I beg pardon, but I wish you would call off the search for the missing man advertised in circulars that have been posted on all of the telegraph poles and published in the telegraph poles and published in the newspapers."

For instance, a father or mother hurries into a police station and informs the auappeared from home, and that no trace of him has been seen for many days. The first step is to obtain a complete description of the missing man, and after that an atand is likely to read something like the following:

Departmental detectives generally speak with disdain of the supposed skill of Sherlock Holmes-is it because of that famous detective's covert attacks on their methods? -but at times they do not hesitate to employ the tactics of the celebrated Englishman. Under certain conditions, therefore, "missing" cases are susceptible to the the ory of deduction. For instance, if a business man suddenly leaves his relatives and friends and associates, it is the most natural thing in the world to at once begin an investigation of his accounts for the purpose of discovering if anything is wrong, and in the majority of cases something is found decidedly wrong. Again, if a young found decidedly wrong. Again, if a young girl who is surrounded with all that should make her home life desirable mysteriously leaves the paternal roof, the question is at once asked: Had she a love affair? And in seven cases out of ten it is proved that she had a love affair. But even after making allowance for this feature of the case, it is reasonably certain that more than 5,000 persons were swallowed up in oblivion.

Pathos and Comedy.

But, as already indicated, there are still these peculiar cases, if they could but be brought to light, would rival many of the novels penned by the world's greatest writers. No subject that can be imagined has such weird fascination as that of the thousands who have gone down this grand canyon of oblivion.

It would be possible to fill many pages with the absorbing stories of these curious cases, but nearly every reader of the newspapers, whether he live in village, town or light, would now be a feature of the police departments of every important city.

cases, but nearly every reader of the newspapers, whether he live in village, town or city, is probably acquainted with some instance of the kind concerning either friend or relative. Men and women who have lost all they have treasured most in life in this manner go about vacantly, numbly, ever waiting for the return of the missing one-a dream that never comes true.
