The short sleeve is to go. That will stop the girls from showing some of their good points.

Now a Swedish sportsman wants to race for the America cup. His line of advertising is not stated.

The scene of the play, "A Fool and a Girl," is laid in San Francisco. How did the author come to overlook Pittsburg?

Mr. Fairbanks still denies that he drank or ordered those cocktails. He does not even use cherries in his buttermilk.

A Boston minister says there are no automobiles in heaven. Certainly not. Where in heaven would they find chauffeurs?

Senator Depew says he has a bunch of new jokes. Let him tell 'em to Senator Platt. The rest of the country is busy.

Physicians now contend that life may be prolonged by the drinking of sour milk, but few would care to have it prolonged at that cost.

Democrats of the country are apparently having some difficulty in convincing Mr. Bryan that he is not a candidate for the presidency.

The president's trip down the Mississippi has been exceedingly pleasant thus far. "Jim Bludso" has not been recited at any of the receptions.

Dr. Oeler says a physician's success is largely a question of good health. Wrong again. A physician's success depends largely upon ill-health.

"The Knox boom has been revived in Kentucky," says a southern paper. Kentucky hospitality always includes the offer of something reviving.

The grape crop in the south of France has been destroyed, but California is on hand with the assurance that the supply of French wines will be as liberal as ever.

Spain is very much worried about its subjects that are working on the Panama canal. Spain should feel good to think that its subjects are working at anything.

No one has explained why all those goods that are "absolutely pure" before the pure food law went into effect have now been advanced in price because of the operations of the new law.

A Philadelphia editor says that the world has overestimated Shakespeare, which is interesting only as showing that Philadelphia has got as far as the Shakespeare age in history. Just wait until they hear about the civil war and George Cohan's dramatic efforts.

It is proposed to have Colonel Bryan's speeches prepared for reproduction on phonographs for use in the democratic national campaign. Particular pains will be taken to see that the speech he made in Madison Square garden, on his return from Europe, advocating the government ownership of railroads, is not included in the list.

INLAND WATERWAYS.

Attention has been called during the last week to the inland waterways of the great central valley of the United States in a way that has been emphasized by the president's personal utterances.

It is part of the training of the child and the boy that marshals his toy soldiers and kills off countless thousands of the unseen enemy in developing a strategy and sense of meeting emergencies that serves him in any capacity of life after his nursery and school days are over.

With this point settled affirmatively, comes the question of detail involving the establishment of the necessary fleet of boats and preparations for their accommodation on the waters.

Such improvements as have been made of recent years on the Mississippi at its mouth have tended to increase its flow, and have been of direct advantage to commerce in this way.

The sturdy boys of the nation, the lads in the kilt and knickerbocker stages, would be pleased to know, if they were able to grasp the significance of current events, that one of their sacred rights and privileges has been preserved for them only after a fight.

The trouble was started in this case by the Pittsburg Peace society, a commendable organization inspired with worthy aims, which recently sent a representative abroad to induce the toy manufacturers of Europe to quit making toy soldiers, swords and other implements of warfare in miniature.

The manufacture of toys is a matter of business, not of sentiment. The output of soldiers and cannon and drums will cease when the public ceases to demand them and the prospect for that condition is not imminent.

The figures become fairly dazzling when the egg business is taken into consideration. According to Mr. Wilson's figures the 233,598,055 chickens in the country in 1900 produced 1,293,819,186 dozen eggs, even count.

The trouble is in the fact that the condition is not imminent. As a matter of fact, the playing with toy soldiers and the beating of mimic battle drums does not make soldiers any more than swimming develops fins or singing in a surprised choir sprouts wings.

Official statistics issued by the Chinese and British governments serve to confirm the contention made by this paper that the American government has been paying more attention to the trade of China than the results have warranted.

For many years statesmen in congress have been calling attention to the wonderful wealth that will come to the nation that secures a liberal share of the trade of the Chinese empire.

With a little encouragement the United States could build up a trade with Canada and Mexico that would amount to as much in a year as the trade with China aggregates in a decade.

Secretary of Agriculture Wilson has just given another illustration in proof of the old adage that every crisis or emergency finds a man equal to meet it.

Mr. Wilson, by the way, insists that the hen is entitled by every law of justice to be recognized as the national bird. He admits that the eagle has credit to distinction as a dress parade fowl, but when it comes right down to utilitarianism the hen has him backed off the boards.

But to return to the omelette, the secretary has it figured out that by judicious treatment the American hen may be persuaded to increase her output of eggs by at least one dozen per year per hen, thereby adding $50,000,000 annually to the value of the American farm products and a little matter of about 200,000,000 dozen eggs, or about twenty-five eggs a year for each man, woman and child in the United States, continental and colonial, which ought to help some.

This chicken business is a great proposition, when one is lured into the statistics on the subject. For instance, by the census tables there were in the United States in 1900 a little matter of 233,598,055 chickens, or 3.1 chickens, that is three whole chickens and a drumstick, for each person.

The cause for this condition is not difficult to locate. The church officers have not kept pace with the progress and changes that have taken place in other vocations in the last few years.

The trouble is in the fact that the condition is not imminent. As a matter of fact, the playing with toy soldiers and the beating of mimic battle drums does not make soldiers any more than swimming develops fins or singing in a surprised choir sprouts wings.

originally "strictly fresh." With an average value of 11 cents a dozen, the total aggregates $142,320,110, or just about the amount appropriated by congress each year to meet the pension roll.

What Absinthe Will Do. King Chaulalongkorn had a birthday the other day. Be it understood that there is a real King Chaulalongkorn and that the name, which looks like a section of scrambled alphabet, belongs to a man and not to a headache cure.

It may even throw an illuminating light on the king's title, which, as written by himself and proclaimed throughout his domain, is as follows: King of Siam, the most high, illustrious, invincible and powerful monarch, crowned with 10 golden crowns, each adorned with 100 species of precious gems, greatest, purest and most divine master of immortal souls, who sees all things; sovereign emperor, under the shadow of whose wings lie the rich and incomparable Kingdom of Siam, to whom is subject the most fruitful of all lands lit by the rays of heaven; whose palace is of the gold and jewels; divine master of the golden throne, and of the white and red elephants; sovereign god of nine kinds of gods; king who is like unto the sun at its zenith, and like unto the full moon in the time of harvest; king whose glance is more dazzling than the orb of the morning; king who is above all emperors, monarchs and potentates of the universe from the rising to the setting of the sun.

All of those sounds remarkably alluring, like the alliterative thrillers used in circus advertising, and it might give Americans an idea that King Chaulalongkorn was some pumpkins, if it were not for the fact that the data about conditions in Siam refute some of his claims.

The presidential bear hunt in the canyons of Louisiana affords no exhilaration for the bears of Wall street. The latter are as tame as Davy Crockett's coon. It is announced by those who think they know that women's hats now are the same as they were one hundred years ago. This explains the mystery of looking backward when the hat goes by.

Clearly Chaulalongkorn's picture of himself is due to his indulgence in absinthe.

From the general session of the Protestant Episcopal church at Richmond, Va., the Presbytery of the south and from nearly all meetings of different denominations throughout the country comes the call for more men for the ministry and the complaint that young men are not seeking the ministry as a vocation in numbers anything like sufficient to meet the constant and growing demand.

The ship subsidy bill will be urged in congress again this winter. It is absolutely necessary for congress to have some measure it can fight about while the legislation is being fixed up on the side.

Oberlin M. Carter has secured a job on a Standard Oil railroad in Florida. Carter succeeded in robbing Uncle Sam, but he will find a harder proposition if he tries to get ahead of the Standard.

It was a brilliant finish. King Ak-Sar-Ben gave the hoodoo number a few knockout drops. "The Winning of the South" will be an appropriate companion volume for "The Winning of the West."

Some eminent scientist figures that the average man winks his eyes 4,000,000 times a year. It should be added that the statistics were compiled before winks were put out of business at Omaha soda fountains.

Unconsciously, perhaps, a prominent banker advocates giving color tones to paper money similar to the tint which distinguishes classes of celluloid chips, the side ornaments of card decks. If the suggestion goes the banker will take the first stick.

SECULAR SHOTS AT THE PULPIT

Louisville Courier Journal: The Chicago minister may have met 200 women on a jag, but there naturally arises a question as to the length of his jag.

Washington Herald: When ministers exchange pulpits as a courtesy to one another they usually preach an old sermon, but they generally are careful enough to look over the manuscript to see if the local points need any alteration.

"MOTHER"

James Whitcomb Riley in The Century. I'm gittin' old-I know- It seems so long ago...

I know I'm gittin' old-I know it by the cold. "Tom time at first frost flees- Seems like- since John here- Winters is more severe; And winter I de-spair!

When Jim come- (I-!)- how good- Was all the neighborhood- And Doctor- when I heard Jim joke John, kind of him- And say: Yes, folks could go- "Pa" needn't be afraid!

That's his way; but of John Was here, lookin' on- He'd shurely know and see; "But, Mother," spect he'd say, "Eh, you air gittin' gray, You're younger yet than me!"
