JAPAN HONORED YOUNG TAFT

War Secretary's Son Had a Great Time in Tokio.

SEES SIGHTS OF THE CAPITAL

American Youngster Gets a Doll as a Gift and Rides About in an Imperial Carriage—Japs Interest Him.

Charlie Taft, the young son of the secretary of war, had the most of his life in Tokio, which his father was doing the work of diplomacy at garden parties, dinners and audiences with the emperor during the brief sojourn of the Taft party in the Japanese capital last month.

An accidental boy is always a curiosity to the children loving Japanese because he is so different from the Japanese boy, but in Charlie's case the fact that he had a doll and a ride about in an imperial carriage rather than the emperor's attention to detail as they paid to the doing of his father.

The Japanese government, mindful of the small things of toys, not only provided entertainment of the most lavish sort for Mr. and Mrs. Taft, but also kept the tail of his eye on young Charlie and paid him honor that few American boys in Japan ever before received.

On the great day when Charlie Taft went out in the imperial carriage with the official interpreter and the official guide the children of Tokio turned out to welcome him wherever he passed.

When the American boy opened the package he found that the storekeeper had given him a Japanese doll. The Hocho Shimizu in describing the incident said that "Master Taft accepted the beautiful gift with grace."
