Health, An Omaha Asset.

A volume on "Mortality Statistics," just issued by the federal Census Bureau, covering the years 1902 to 1906, inclusive, serves to give renewed emphasis to Omaha's distinction of being one of the most healthful cities of the nation. The figures given in the census report are taken only for those states and cities which have well-enforced laws providing for the registration of births and deaths. These laws are in force only in fifteen states, of which Nebraska is not one, but the city ordinances of Omaha are recognized by the federal authorities as official and authentic. The absence of a state law requiring this registration makes it difficult to draw comparisons for the state, with those of less favored location, but the unofficial reports are sufficient to show that death has a small harvest in Nebraska, compared with results in other states to the east. The appended mortality statistics are taken from the census reports for 1906, the cities selected for comparison with Omaha being located in widely distributed sections of the country:

Cities.	Population.	Death Rate Per 1,000
Albany, N. Y.	98,357	18.
Buffalo	381,819	16.6
Boston	692,378	18.9
Baltimore	553,535	17.
Denver	553,659	19.4
Atlanta	104,984	25.1
Newark, N. J.	289,634	19.2
Washington, D. C.	507,716	20.5
Seattle	193,333	12.7
Indianapolis	219,154	14.5
Kansas City	182,376	15.3
Los Angeles	116,479	18.
Milwaukee	317,905	14.5
San Antonio	62,711	24.6
Salt Lake	61,202	16.7
Pittsburg	375,982	19.9
OMAHA	124,167	11.4

The moral, to those who consider life worth living, is, "Come to Omaha."
