

Young Ladies' Fine Shoes $3.50, $4.00 and $5.00

Our young ladies' low shoes are exceptionally good and have an individuality of style to be found only in our shoes.

Patent Leather and Dull Leather Eclipse Pumps. Patent Leather and Dull Leather Ankle Strap Pumps. Vel-ooze Pumps—the newest thing.

Lilliputian Style Pumps, with wide toe and low heel—hazel brown calf—patent, dull and suede leathers.

$3.50, $4.00 and $5.00

1518-1520 Farnam Street

Telegram—Garst carried Cerro Gordo county for governor by a majority of 833.

WASHINGTON, June 8.—Early reports of the victory of Governor Carroll, the standard candidate for governor in the republican primaries in Iowa, and of the two regular republican candidates for congress, Walter I. Smith and C. A. Kennedy, against whom the insurgents under the leadership of Senator Cummins made the strongest fight, caused a jubilation in the camp of organization republicans at the capital today.

Mr. Smith was renominated in the Ninth district, is a member of the rules committee of the house and one of Speaker Cannon's staunchest supporters.

The defeat of J. A. T. Hull in the Senate there will be a new chairman of the house and a new chairman of the house.

It was Judge Smith's great personal popularity, that overcame his record on the house rules fight in the primaries yesterday, was the insurgent view of the results as voiced by Representative Murdock of Kansas.

"Insurgents scored a net gain of two in the primaries," contended Mr. Murdock, "and the results bespeak the progress of the insurgent."

"The principal fight of the progressives was waged on Congressman Hull," said Senator Cummins. "He has been in congress for twenty years and is chairman of the military committee and a leading ally of Speaker Cannon. His retirement is a big victory for us."

The progressives have had an uphill fight as it has been the custom to give the governor two terms in Iowa.

SMITH'S LEAD IS SAFE ONE About Twelve Hundred to Good in Agreed Figures.

Table with 3 columns: Candidate, Smith's, Byers' (Maj.). Rows include Pottawattamie, Adams, Cass, Mills, Guthrie, Harrison, Montgomery, Audubon, Shelby.

The foregoing figures are a fair estimate in the absence of the official returns of the result of the contest in the Ninth Iowa district, and are agreed upon at both Smith's and Byers' headquarters as virtually correct. Judge Smith has a lead, according to these figures, of about 1,200.

He returned to Washington Wednesday evening well satisfied with the result. The managers of the Byers' campaign were willing to concede Judge Smith's nomination by about 1,000, and maintain that it was Council Bluffs alone that saved him.

Manager O. J. McMahon said: "We did the best we could and put up a good fight and the result is shown. We are all right and will support Judge Smith, now that he is nominated. The campaign has shown that the progressive spirit has come to stay, and that the fight for progressiveness within the republican party has but just begun."

Fort Dodge Man Dies in Bolivia

Raymond Sargent, Connected with Mine Exploring Party, Succumbs to Mountain Fever.

FORT DODGE, Ia., June 8.—(Special Telegram)—Through a letter written in almost illegible Spanish, last March 18, and just received in Fort Dodge by Herbert Sargent, the news was conveyed today to relatives of the untimely death of Raymond Sargent, a brother of the Fort Dodge man. The deceased, afflicted by a fever, having been attacked by the fatal malarial while prospecting in Bolivia for a last mine. He was taken ill at San Ignacio, five hundred miles from a railroad. Herbert Sargent, alarmed at the long silence of his brother had started inquiries of the American consul at La Paz, Bolivia.

The Spanish letter's message was a mystery to Herbert Sargent for several days after its receipt as he could find no one to translate it until today when Miss Kate Healy, Latin instructor in the high school was appealed to and readily translated the words. They were penned by a Bolivian who joined the mine-hunting expedition composed of Sargent, and three Englishmen. He nursed the foreigners when they were fever stricken. The Englishman survived. Sargent, who was thirty-eight, had been in the south three years, connected as an engineer with the South American Construction company.

SHERMAN PLEADS FOR PARTY UNITY

(Continued from First Page.)

Immediate steps will be taken to have the body shipped here for burial. There survives his parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Sargent of Upland, California; Arthur Sargent of Fondra, Mrs. Free Holton, Upland, Cal.; Mrs. D. A. Kelley of Guadala, Mex. Cal.; and D. A. Kelley of Guadala, Mex. brothers and sisters.

The reaction of the last year against prohibition indicates that the American people have taken a second step thought. While we hope that the worst stage of the distemper is past, we must continue our organized efforts to prevent such evils in the future and show our readiness to co-operate with the real leader of republican government in the betterment of our business."

Prohibition Wave Receding. The vigilance committee in its annual report said it believes that the year just ended marked the highest and the beginning of the recession of the wave of prohibition, and so reported today.

In Alabama's repudiation of a prohibition amendment to the state's constitution the brewers see great hope of the license principle being applied in territories now totally dry and the committee views with satisfaction the districts which have swung out of the dry column.

A resume of conditions through the states, presented to the convention by the committee, charges in effect that prohibition in many states prohibited nothing at all.

For Georgia, the committee reported: "This state is legally dry, but actually moist as the needs of the people require. Under prohibition illicit distilling has troubled in the state and the moonshiner now gets $5 a gallon for the stuff he uses to sell for $10."

In Oklahoma, the committee declared, there were three times as many arrests as violations since the state had gone dry as there were when it was licensed territory.

"Kentucky," the committee reported, "gives unmistakable signs that it has no use for statewide prohibition, while Maine, the parent of prohibition, is still going on in the old way, giving forth no fruits of repentance."

A condition which the committee described as alarming was reported as existing in South Carolina. "Never has illicit whisky distilling been so popular as in the last year," said the committee. "Revenue officers' records show more than 200 illicit distilleries and arrests of more than 200,000 gallons of whisky and low wines, including 'white licker' confiscated."

In Greenville county, in a month, thirty-one stills were confiscated, the report asserts. Reports from other states, the committee told the convention, gave hope that the high tide of prohibition was passing.

While the prohibition movement has ridden at high tide, the sale of beer has increased 90,000,000 gallons and the sale of spirits has bounded upward 11,000,000 gallons. In these 90,000,000 gallons of beer were nearly 4,000,000 gallons of pure alcohol.

Such was the report of the board of trustees to the National State Bar association in convention here today. The volume of business of the year just ended, the trustees believe, will exceed 1908, which was the banner year for the brewing industry in this country.

All the increases in the volume of the brewing industry have decreased larger by the face of the fact that 4,000,000 inhabitants of the United States are said to live in dry territory. In these gains the brewers see signs of hope that the prohibition movement has touched its highest spot and is now on the wane.

"One cannot predict the drink question without being puzzled by its paradoxes," says the report. "It is an unquestioned fact that the people of the United States are steadily becoming more temperate and yet the consumption of alcohol increases just as steadily as the growth of temperance. Not only is the volume of the sale of alcoholic beverages decreasing larger, but the per capita consumption is increasing."

"What does this mean? Does it not indicate that while such beverages are coming into more common use the people are learning to use them more intelligently? The old idea that total abstinence is the only road to safety is being replaced by the new idea of moderation both in eating and in drinking, by that of self control."

Argument for Canteen. Strong argument for the restoration of the army canteen was made to the United States Brewers' convention today in the report of its publication committee. In reviewing the picture of prohibition and anti-prohibition argument which had been printed through the press and publications of the country during the last year, the committee expressed its conviction that the reading public had been impressed by the quality of the argument and not the quantity.

"Public opinion as interpreted by the press of the country and expressed in many recent elections," the report said, "is crystallizing against prohibition. In spite of the tremendous forces of wealth, power, and fanaticism arrayed in its support, prohibition has not the standing before the American people which it had a short year ago."

The editorial expressions of many newspapers, magazines and other publications favoring license were presented to the convention. In reviewing the picture of prohibition and anti-prohibition argument which had been printed through the press and publications of the country during the last year, the committee expressed its conviction that the reading public had been impressed by the quality of the argument and not the quantity.

"Public opinion as interpreted by the press of the country and expressed in many recent elections," the report said, "is crystallizing against prohibition. In spite of the tremendous forces of wealth, power, and fanaticism arrayed in its support, prohibition has not the standing before the American people which it had a short year ago."

The editorial expressions of many newspapers, magazines and other publications favoring license were presented to the convention. In reviewing the picture of prohibition and anti-prohibition argument which had been printed through the press and publications of the country during the last year, the committee expressed its conviction that the reading public had been impressed by the quality of the argument and not the quantity.

"Public opinion as interpreted by the press of the country and expressed in many recent elections," the report said, "is crystallizing against prohibition. In spite of the tremendous forces of wealth, power, and fanaticism arrayed in its support, prohibition has not the standing before the American people which it had a short year ago."

The editorial expressions of many newspapers, magazines and other publications favoring license were presented to the convention. In reviewing the picture of prohibition and anti-prohibition argument which had been printed through the press and publications of the country during the last year, the committee expressed its conviction that the reading public had been impressed by the quality of the argument and not the quantity.

"Public opinion as interpreted by the press of the country and expressed in many recent elections," the report said, "is crystallizing against prohibition. In spite of the tremendous forces of wealth, power, and fanaticism arrayed in its support, prohibition has not the standing before the American people which it had a short year ago."

The editorial expressions of many newspapers, magazines and other publications favoring license were presented to the convention. In reviewing the picture of prohibition and anti-prohibition argument which had been printed through the press and publications of the country during the last year, the committee expressed its conviction that the reading public had been impressed by the quality of the argument and not the quantity.

"Public opinion as interpreted by the press of the country and expressed in many recent elections," the report said, "is crystallizing against prohibition. In spite of the tremendous forces of wealth, power, and fanaticism arrayed in its support, prohibition has not the standing before the American people which it had a short year ago."

The editorial expressions of many newspapers, magazines and other publications favoring license were presented to the convention. In reviewing the picture of prohibition and anti-prohibition argument which had been printed through the press and publications of the country during the last year, the committee expressed its conviction that the reading public had been impressed by the quality of the argument and not the quantity.

"Public opinion as interpreted by the press of the country and expressed in many recent elections," the report said, "is crystallizing against prohibition. In spite of the tremendous forces of wealth, power, and fanaticism arrayed in its support, prohibition has not the standing before the American people which it had a short year ago."

The editorial expressions of many newspapers, magazines and other publications favoring license were presented to the convention. In reviewing the picture of prohibition and anti-prohibition argument which had been printed through the press and publications of the country during the last year, the committee expressed its conviction that the reading public had been impressed by the quality of the argument and not the quantity.

"Public opinion as interpreted by the press of the country and expressed in many recent elections," the report said, "is crystallizing against prohibition. In spite of the tremendous forces of wealth, power, and fanaticism arrayed in its support, prohibition has not the standing before the American people which it had a short year ago."

The editorial expressions of many newspapers, magazines and other publications favoring license were presented to the convention. In reviewing the picture of prohibition and anti-prohibition argument which had been printed through the press and publications of the country during the last year, the committee expressed its conviction that the reading public had been impressed by the quality of the argument and not the quantity.

"Public opinion as interpreted by the press of the country and expressed in many recent elections," the report said, "is crystallizing against prohibition. In spite of the tremendous forces of wealth, power, and fanaticism arrayed in its support, prohibition has not the standing before the American people which it had a short year ago."

The editorial expressions of many newspapers, magazines and other publications favoring license were presented to the convention. In reviewing the picture of prohibition and anti-prohibition argument which had been printed through the press and publications of the country during the last year, the committee expressed its conviction that the reading public had been impressed by the quality of the argument and not the quantity.

"Public opinion as interpreted by the press of the country and expressed in many recent elections," the report said, "is crystallizing against prohibition. In spite of the tremendous forces of wealth, power, and fanaticism arrayed in its support, prohibition has not the standing before the American people which it had a short year ago."

The editorial expressions of many newspapers, magazines and other publications favoring license were presented to the convention. In reviewing the picture of prohibition and anti-prohibition argument which had been printed through the press and publications of the country during the last year, the committee expressed its conviction that the reading public had been impressed by the quality of the argument and not the quantity.

"Public opinion as interpreted by the press of the country and expressed in many recent elections," the report said, "is crystallizing against prohibition. In spite of the tremendous forces of wealth, power, and fanaticism arrayed in its support, prohibition has not the standing before the American people which it had a short year ago."

The editorial expressions of many newspapers, magazines and other publications favoring license were presented to the convention. In reviewing the picture of prohibition and anti-prohibition argument which had been printed through the press and publications of the country during the last year, the committee expressed its conviction that the reading public had been impressed by the quality of the argument and not the quantity.

"Public opinion as interpreted by the press of the country and expressed in many recent elections," the report said, "is crystallizing against prohibition. In spite of the tremendous forces of wealth, power, and fanaticism arrayed in its support, prohibition has not the standing before the American people which it had a short year ago."

The editorial expressions of many newspapers, magazines and other publications favoring license were presented to the convention. In reviewing the picture of prohibition and anti-prohibition argument which had been printed through the press and publications of the country during the last year, the committee expressed its conviction that the reading public had been impressed by the quality of the argument and not the quantity.

"Public opinion as interpreted by the press of the country and expressed in many recent elections," the report said, "is crystallizing against prohibition. In spite of the tremendous forces of wealth, power, and fanaticism arrayed in its support, prohibition has not the standing before the American people which it had a short year ago."

The editorial expressions of many newspapers, magazines and other publications favoring license were presented to the convention. In reviewing the picture of prohibition and anti-prohibition argument which had been printed through the press and publications of the country during the last year, the committee expressed its conviction that the reading public had been impressed by the quality of the argument and not the quantity.

"Public opinion as interpreted by the press of the country and expressed in many recent elections," the report said, "is crystallizing against prohibition. In spite of the tremendous forces of wealth, power, and fanaticism arrayed in its support, prohibition has not the standing before the American people which it had a short year ago."

The editorial expressions of many newspapers, magazines and other publications favoring license were presented to the convention. In reviewing the picture of prohibition and anti-prohibition argument which had been printed through the press and publications of the country during the last year, the committee expressed its conviction that the reading public had been impressed by the quality of the argument and not the quantity.

"Public opinion as interpreted by the press of the country and expressed in many recent elections," the report said, "is crystallizing against prohibition. In spite of the tremendous forces of wealth, power, and fanaticism arrayed in its support, prohibition has not the standing before the American people which it had a short year ago."

The editorial expressions of many newspapers, magazines and other publications favoring license were presented to the convention. In reviewing the picture of prohibition and anti-prohibition argument which had been printed through the press and publications of the country during the last year, the committee expressed its conviction that the reading public had been impressed by the quality of the argument and not the quantity.

"Public opinion as interpreted by the press of the country and expressed in many recent elections," the report said, "is crystallizing against prohibition. In spite of the tremendous forces of wealth, power, and fanaticism arrayed in its support, prohibition has not the standing before the American people which it had a short year ago."

The editorial expressions of many newspapers, magazines and other publications favoring license were presented to the convention. In reviewing the picture of prohibition and anti-prohibition argument which had been printed through the press and publications of the country during the last year, the committee expressed its conviction that the reading public had been impressed by the quality of the argument and not the quantity.

"Public opinion as interpreted by the press of the country and expressed in many recent elections," the report said, "is crystallizing against prohibition. In spite of the tremendous forces of wealth, power, and fanaticism arrayed in its support, prohibition has not the standing before the American people which it had a short year ago."

The editorial expressions of many newspapers, magazines and other publications favoring license were presented to the convention. In reviewing the picture of prohibition and anti-prohibition argument which had been printed through the press and publications of the country during the last year, the committee expressed its conviction that the reading public had been impressed by the quality of the argument and not the quantity.

"Public opinion as interpreted by the press of the country and expressed in many recent elections," the report said, "is crystallizing against prohibition. In spite of the tremendous forces of wealth, power, and fanaticism arrayed in its support, prohibition has not the standing before the American people which it had a short year ago."

The editorial expressions of many newspapers, magazines and other publications favoring license were presented to the convention. In reviewing the picture of prohibition and anti-prohibition argument which had been printed through the press and publications of the country during the last year, the committee expressed its conviction that the reading public had been impressed by the quality of the argument and not the quantity.

"Public opinion as interpreted by the press of the country and expressed in many recent elections," the report said, "is crystallizing against prohibition. In spite of the tremendous forces of wealth, power, and fanaticism arrayed in its support, prohibition has not the standing before the American people which it had a short year ago."

The editorial expressions of many newspapers, magazines and other publications favoring license were presented to the convention. In reviewing the picture of prohibition and anti-prohibition argument which had been printed through the press and publications of the country during the last year, the committee expressed its conviction that the reading public had been impressed by the quality of the argument and not the quantity.

"Public opinion as interpreted by the press of the country and expressed in many recent elections," the report said, "is crystallizing against prohibition. In spite of the tremendous forces of wealth, power, and fanaticism arrayed in its support, prohibition has not the standing before the American people which it had a short year ago."

The editorial expressions of many newspapers, magazines and other publications favoring license were presented to the convention. In reviewing the picture of prohibition and anti-prohibition argument which had been printed through the press and publications of the country during the last year, the committee expressed its conviction that the reading public had been impressed by the quality of the argument and not the quantity.

"Public opinion as interpreted by the press of the country and expressed in many recent elections," the report said, "is crystallizing against prohibition. In spite of the tremendous forces of wealth, power, and fanaticism arrayed in its support, prohibition has not the standing before the American people which it had a short year ago."

The editorial expressions of many newspapers, magazines and other publications favoring license were presented to the convention. In reviewing the picture of prohibition and anti-prohibition argument which had been printed through the press and publications of the country during the last year, the committee expressed its conviction that the reading public had been impressed by the quality of the argument and not the quantity.

"Public opinion as interpreted by the press of the country and expressed in many recent elections," the report said, "is crystallizing against prohibition. In spite of the tremendous forces of wealth, power, and fanaticism arrayed in its support, prohibition has not the standing before the American people which it had a short year ago."

The editorial expressions of many newspapers, magazines and other publications favoring license were presented to the convention. In reviewing the picture of prohibition and anti-prohibition argument which had been printed through the press and publications of the country during the last year, the committee expressed its conviction that the reading public had been impressed by the quality of the argument and not the quantity.

"Public opinion as interpreted by the press of the country and expressed in many recent elections," the report said, "is crystallizing against prohibition. In spite of the tremendous forces of wealth, power, and fanaticism arrayed in its support, prohibition has not the standing before the American people which it had a short year ago."

The editorial expressions of many newspapers, magazines and other publications favoring license were presented to the convention. In reviewing the picture of prohibition and anti-prohibition argument which had been printed through the press and publications of the country during the last year, the committee expressed its conviction that the reading public had been impressed by the quality of the argument and not the quantity.

"Public opinion as interpreted by the press of the country and expressed in many recent elections," the report said, "is crystallizing against prohibition. In spite of the tremendous forces of wealth, power, and fanaticism arrayed in its support, prohibition has not the standing before the American people which it had a short year ago."

The editorial expressions of many newspapers, magazines and other publications favoring license were presented to the convention. In reviewing the picture of prohibition and anti-prohibition argument which had been printed through the press and publications of the country during the last year, the committee expressed its conviction that the reading public had been impressed by the quality of the argument and not the quantity.

"Public opinion as interpreted by the press of the country and expressed in many recent elections," the report said, "is crystallizing against prohibition. In spite of the tremendous forces of wealth, power, and fanaticism arrayed in its support, prohibition has not the standing before the American people which it had a short year ago."

The editorial expressions of many newspapers, magazines and other publications favoring license were presented to the convention. In reviewing the picture of prohibition and anti-prohibition argument which had been printed through the press and publications of the country during the last year, the committee expressed its conviction that the reading public had been impressed by the quality of the argument and not the quantity.

"Public opinion as interpreted by the press of the country and expressed in many recent elections," the report said, "is crystallizing against prohibition. In spite of the tremendous forces of wealth, power, and fanaticism arrayed in its support, prohibition has not the standing before the American people which it had a short year ago."

The editorial expressions of many newspapers, magazines and other publications favoring license were presented to the convention. In reviewing the picture of prohibition and anti-prohibition argument which had been printed through the press and publications of the country during the last year, the committee expressed its conviction that the reading public had been impressed by the quality of the argument and not the quantity.

"Public opinion as interpreted by the press of the country and expressed in many recent elections," the report said, "is crystallizing against prohibition. In spite of the tremendous forces of wealth, power, and fanaticism arrayed in its support, prohibition has not the standing before the American people which it had a short year ago."

The editorial expressions of many newspapers, magazines and other publications favoring license were presented to the convention. In reviewing the picture of prohibition and anti-prohibition argument which had been printed through the press and publications of the country during the last year, the committee expressed its conviction that the reading public had been impressed by the quality of the argument and not the quantity.

"Public opinion as interpreted by the press of the country and expressed in many recent elections," the report said, "is crystallizing against prohibition. In spite of the tremendous forces of wealth, power, and fanaticism arrayed in its support, prohibition has not the standing before the American people which it had a short year ago."

The editorial expressions of many newspapers, magazines and other publications favoring license were presented to the convention. In reviewing the picture of prohibition and anti-prohibition argument which had been printed through the press and publications of the country during the last year, the committee expressed its conviction that the reading public had been impressed by the quality of the argument and not the quantity.

"Public opinion as interpreted by the press of the country and expressed in many recent elections," the report said, "is crystallizing against prohibition. In spite of the tremendous forces of wealth, power, and fanaticism arrayed in its support, prohibition has not the standing before the American people which it had a short year ago."

The editorial expressions of many newspapers, magazines and other publications favoring license were presented to the convention. In reviewing the picture of prohibition and anti-prohibition argument which had been printed through the press and publications of the country during the last year, the committee expressed its conviction that the reading public had been impressed by the quality of the argument and not the quantity.

"Public opinion as interpreted by the press of the country and expressed in many recent elections," the report said, "is crystallizing against prohibition. In spite of the tremendous forces of wealth, power, and fanaticism arrayed in its support, prohibition has not the standing before the American people which it had a short year ago."

The editorial expressions of many newspapers, magazines and other publications favoring license were presented to the convention. In reviewing the picture of prohibition and anti-prohibition argument which had been printed through the press and publications of the country during the last year, the committee expressed its conviction that the reading public had been impressed by the quality of the argument and not the quantity.

"Public opinion as interpreted by the press of the country and expressed in many recent elections," the report said, "is crystallizing against prohibition. In spite of the tremendous forces of wealth, power, and fanaticism arrayed in its support, prohibition has not the standing before the American people which it had a short year ago."

The editorial expressions of many newspapers, magazines and other publications favoring license were presented to the convention. In reviewing the picture of prohibition and anti-prohibition argument which had been printed through the press and publications of the country during the last year, the committee expressed its conviction that the reading public had been impressed by the quality of the argument and not the quantity.

"Public opinion as interpreted by the press of the country and expressed in many recent elections," the report said, "is crystallizing against prohibition. In spite of the tremendous forces of wealth, power, and fanaticism arrayed in its support, prohibition has not the standing before the American people which it had a short year ago."

The editorial expressions of many newspapers, magazines and other publications favoring license were presented to the convention. In reviewing the picture of prohibition and anti-prohibition argument which had been printed through the press and publications of the country during the last year, the committee expressed its conviction that the reading public had been impressed by the quality of the argument and not the quantity.

"Public opinion as interpreted by the press of the country and expressed in many recent elections," the report said, "is crystallizing against prohibition. In spite of the tremendous forces of wealth, power, and fanaticism arrayed in its support, prohibition has not the standing before the American people which it had a short year ago."

The editorial expressions of many newspapers, magazines and other publications favoring license were presented to the convention. In reviewing the picture of prohibition and anti-prohibition argument which had been printed through the press and publications of the country during the last year, the committee expressed its conviction that the reading public had been impressed by the quality of the argument and not the quantity.

"Public opinion as interpreted by the press of the country and expressed in many recent elections," the report said, "is crystallizing against prohibition. In spite of the tremendous forces of wealth, power, and fanaticism arrayed in its support, prohibition has not the standing before the American people which it had a short year ago."

The editorial expressions of many newspapers, magazines and other publications favoring license were presented to the convention. In reviewing the picture of prohibition and anti-prohibition argument which had been printed through the press and publications of the country during the last year, the committee expressed its conviction that the reading public had been impressed by the quality of the argument and not the quantity.

"Public opinion as interpreted by the press of the country and expressed in many recent elections," the report said, "is crystallizing against prohibition. In spite of the tremendous forces of wealth, power, and fanaticism arrayed in its support, prohibition has not the standing before the American people which it had a short year ago."

The editorial expressions of many newspapers, magazines and other publications favoring license were presented to the convention. In reviewing the picture of prohibition and anti-prohibition argument which had been printed through the press and publications of the country during the last year, the committee expressed its conviction that the reading public had been impressed by the quality of the argument and not the quantity.

"Public opinion as interpreted by the press of the country and expressed in many recent elections," the report said, "is crystallizing against prohibition. In spite of the tremendous forces of wealth, power, and fanaticism arrayed in its support, prohibition has not the standing before the American people which it had a short year ago."

The editorial expressions of many newspapers, magazines and other publications favoring license were presented to the convention. In reviewing the picture of prohibition and anti-prohibition argument which had been printed through the press and publications of the country during the last year, the committee expressed its conviction that the reading public had been impressed by the quality of the argument and not the quantity.

"Public opinion as interpreted by the press of the country and expressed in many recent elections," the report said, "is crystallizing against prohibition. In spite of the tremendous forces of wealth, power, and fanaticism arrayed in its support, prohibition has not the standing before the American people which it had a short year ago."

The editorial expressions of many newspapers, magazines and other publications favoring license were presented to the convention. In reviewing the picture of prohibition and anti-prohibition argument which had been printed through the press and publications of the country during the last year, the committee expressed its conviction that the reading public had been impressed by the quality of the argument and not the quantity.

"Public opinion as interpreted by the press of the country and expressed in many recent elections," the report said, "is crystallizing against prohibition. In spite of the tremendous forces of wealth, power, and fanaticism arrayed in its support, prohibition has not the standing before the American people which it had a short year ago."

The editorial expressions of many newspapers, magazines and other publications favoring license were presented to the convention. In reviewing the picture of prohibition and anti-prohibition argument which had been printed through the press and publications of the country during the last year, the committee expressed its conviction that the reading public had been impressed by the quality of the argument and not the quantity.

"Public opinion as interpreted by the press of the country and expressed in many recent elections," the report said, "is crystallizing against prohibition. In spite of the tremendous forces of wealth, power, and fanaticism arrayed in its support, prohibition has not the standing before the American people which it had a short year ago."

The editorial expressions of many newspapers, magazines and other publications favoring license were presented to the convention. In reviewing the picture of prohibition and anti-prohibition argument which had been printed through the press and publications of the country during the last year, the committee expressed its conviction that the reading public had been impressed by the quality of the argument and not the quantity.

"Public opinion as interpreted by the press of the country and expressed in many recent elections," the report said, "is crystallizing against prohibition. In spite of the tremendous forces of wealth, power, and fanaticism arrayed in its support, prohibition has not the standing before the American people which it had a short year ago."

The editorial expressions of many newspapers, magazines and other publications favoring license were presented to the convention. In reviewing the picture of prohibition and anti-prohibition argument which had been printed through the press and publications of the country during the last year, the committee expressed its conviction that the reading public had been impressed by the quality of the argument and not the quantity.

"Public opinion as interpreted by the press of the country and expressed in many recent elections," the report said, "is crystallizing against prohibition. In spite of the tremendous forces of wealth, power, and fanaticism arrayed in its support, prohibition has not the standing before the American people which it had a short year ago."

The editorial expressions of many newspapers, magazines and other publications favoring license were presented to the convention. In reviewing the picture of prohibition and anti-prohibition argument which had been printed through the press and publications of the country during the last year, the committee expressed its conviction that the reading public had been impressed by the quality of the argument and not the quantity.

"Public opinion as interpreted by the press of the country and expressed in many recent elections," the report said, "is crystallizing against prohibition. In spite of the tremendous forces of wealth, power, and fanaticism arrayed in its support, prohibition has not the standing before the American people which it had a short year ago."

The editorial expressions of many newspapers, magazines and other publications favoring license were presented to the convention. In reviewing the picture of prohibition and anti-prohibition argument which had been printed through the press and publications of the country during the last year, the committee expressed its conviction that the reading public had been impressed by the quality of the argument and not the quantity.

"Public opinion as interpreted by the press of the country and expressed in many recent elections," the report said, "is crystallizing against prohibition. In spite of the tremendous forces of wealth, power, and fanaticism arrayed in its support, prohibition has not the standing before the American people which it had a short year ago."

The editorial expressions of many newspapers, magazines and other publications favoring license were presented to the convention. In reviewing the picture of prohibition and anti-prohibition argument which had been printed through the press and publications of the country during the last year, the committee expressed its conviction that the reading public had been impressed by the quality of the argument and not the quantity.

"Public opinion as interpreted by the press of the country and expressed in many recent elections," the report said, "is crystallizing against prohibition. In spite of the tremendous forces of wealth, power, and fanaticism arrayed in its support, prohibition has not the standing before the American people which it had a short year ago."

The editorial expressions of many newspapers, magazines and other publications favoring license were presented to the convention. In reviewing the picture of prohibition and anti-prohibition argument which had been printed through the press and publications of the country during the last year, the committee expressed its conviction that the reading public had been impressed by the quality of the argument and not the quantity.

"Public opinion as interpreted by the press of the country and expressed in many recent elections," the report said, "is crystallizing against prohibition. In spite of the tremendous forces of wealth, power, and fanaticism arrayed in its support, prohibition has not the standing before the American people which it had a short year ago."

The editorial expressions of many newspapers, magazines and other publications favoring license were presented to