Mollie always looks as though she ought to be in a carriage. She has a careless way of trailing a $75 hand embroidered petticoat over the pavement that is quite wonderful, I think. She always wears marvelous clothes, and has a very original way of dressing, people say. She had a lovely idea for a gown once, but couldn't get anybody to make it up for her. No one seemed to catch the idea, and when they did, they were so unenthusiastic she got annoyed. It ended by our going out and buying the material and sewing it up ourselves. The skirt was my idea.

We couldn't find a pattern like it, so I cut it out in some way and sort of sewed her up in it one afternoon for a bridge she was going to. She fixed the waist in some way over one she had, and when it was done she was simply delighted. She said the effect was much weirder than she had t as a matter of course. It seems that one woman was so fascinated by it that she hardly realized what she was doing, and doubled a no trump under the impression it was spades, which gave Mollie the prize. Mollie always did think a lot about clothes. I went with her to a cheap tailor once, she had heard was a wonder. He was quite overcome at the thought of getting her custom and worked frightfully hard to suit her. Finally, when he found how difficult she was to fit, he almost gave up in despair. One day he simply burst into tears. It was very awkward. I had no idea Poles were so demonstrative. She had a lot of trouble about his bill, too, as I recollect. I do think she was somewhat in the wrong there. She was very angry when she found he expected to be paid within a year or two. I would much rather go with her to her old
