

BUSINESS AWAITS OUTCOME

Says Leslie M. Shaw, Former Secretary of the Treasury.

ATTENTION TO THE INSURGENTS

Has His Regards to Theodore Roosevelt and Some Parts of the Republican Party Known as Insurgents.

Mr. Shaw, former governor of Iowa, former secretary of the treasury, and now head of a big Philadelphia trust company, gave an interview Wednesday noon in which Theodore Roosevelt and the insurgents were in the vigorous attention.

Mr. Shaw spoke in answer to a question as to the situation and financial outlook. He said:

"It requires very extreme nerve for a locomotive engineer to make schedule time in foggy night weather. On the track now we can really discover nothing, but it is very foggy."

"Here's another illustration: A man works overtime in his office, he leaves late at night, goes home and unlocks the door and enters his home. A footstep is heard. It may be his wife. If so, then there is a chance. It may be a burglar."

"Four years ago business world over went enthusiastically, but since then a strange footstep has been heard in congress and in the senate, and you need not be surprised if business keeps its hands on its pockets until it is learned whether a carcase or a bonum is in store."

"The husband claims to be a friend of business, but business thinks it can see the jimmy in his pocket."

"In addition to this the republican party has abandoned its position and has told the manufacturer that he is not to think you have had enough of the party in the past, but as soon as we can get to you, you will get the real thing."

"Now it is being said to the manufacturer, 'If an article costs you $1, which the dealer can make for 70 cents, we will require him to pay 25 cents in duty, so he will have an equal competition in your territory. While you at the same time have none in the market.'"

"For the first time in the history, an English speaking people is without conservative leadership. For the first time in the history of the United States, no party stands for protection. For the first time in all history the man who has the greatest following of any man living or dead, publicly advocated the abandonment of the underlying legal principles, on which our rights descend. Whenever these principles stand in the way of what the people think they want, and when the courts fail thus to disregard these principles, he holds the courts up to public execration."

Former Secretary Shaw was greeted at the Field club luncheon by several men who heard him speak some years ago at Norfolk. One of them reminded him of this and he replied laughingly:

"When I was appointed secretary of the treasury, people came queuing to me and asking where I stood on a central bank. I said I could not answer until I had looked up my speech and see what I said to those Nebraska fellows."

Bee Want Ad

Brings Wealth to a Canadian

Lysle I. Abbott Tells of Canadian Who Made a Fortune by a Want Ad.

Lysle I. Abbott, receiver for the Independent Telephone company, has returned from Canada with an authentic story of a man who has become wealthy through the medium of a want ad placed in The Omaha Bee. The man is proud of his achievements and carefully preserves the want ad which has made him independent. The story as told by Mr. Abbott is:

"Some years ago W. H. Manchester lost most of his earthly possessions in Cuba, and thought he would try for a new start in Canada. He located at Saskatoon and tried to engage in the business of selling land. He tried to advertise in various papers in Chicago, Minneapolis, Sioux City, St. Paul and other cities with no results."

"One day, about discouraged, he told his wife he would send an advertisement to The Omaha Bee. It appeared in the want ad column. Mr. Abbott saw the advertisement and wrote Mr. Manchester, asking him to go to Regina for him to look after some of Mr. Abbott's possessions in the capital of Saskatchewan. Mr. Manchester went, and after finishing that work, Mr. Abbott introduced him to a man, named G. W. Brown, a wealthy land owner, and Manchester was soon engaged in more business than he could handle, buying and selling land, first for Mr. Brown and later for himself. He reckons his profits for last year at $50,000, and it all came through a want ad in The Bee."

Mr. Manchester keeps that want ad and is a great booster for The Omaha Bee.

The unwarranted and illegal action of the officials of Florence has cost the taxpayers about $7,000, according to the allegations of the plaintiffs, a part of this sum going to the city council for compensation wrongfully taken by its members for sitting as members of a board of equalization.

FLORENCE IN FRAUD CHARGES

Five Residents Ask Injunction Against Paving District.

DECLARE THAT MOVE IS ILLEGAL

Court Refuses Restraining Order, but Sets Hearing for Temporary Injunction—Who the Plaintiffs Are.

Charging fraud the mayor and city council of Florence, in connection with their establishment of an improvement district and ordering pavement of a street in that district, J. S. Paul and others, acting for many affected citizens as well as for themselves, began an action to avoid payment of any improvement assessment taxes in district court Wednesday afternoon. They filed a petition for a restraining order and a perpetual injunction to prevent George Sier, city treasurer of Florence, and D. M. Haverly, county clerk of Douglas county, from proceeding to collect the assessments by sale of abutting property.

The restraining order was refused, but a hearing on the temporary injunction was set for October 10.

The plaintiffs, J. S. Paul, L. Shipley, J. V. Shipley, J. P. Brown and A. F. Close, allege that the mayor and city council fraudulently and wholly in violation of law ordered the establishment of the improvement district, ordered pavement of the street; awarded a contract for the work to one Ford without having duly considered bids for the contract; wrongfully and fraudulently charged the entire cost of the work to owners of abutting property, when by the terms of its franchise the Omaha & Council Bluffs Street Railway company must pave between its rails and ten inches outside of each rail; and charged the owners of abutting property for the full contract price of the work, when the contractor had saved money on it by making the concrete base but 2 1/2 inches thick when the specifications required a thickness of 3 1/2 inches.

The unwarranted and illegal action of the officials of Florence has cost the taxpayers about $7,000, according to the allegations of the plaintiffs, a part of this sum going to the city council for compensation wrongfully taken by its members for sitting as members of a board of equalization.
