Painting Sleeping Beauties.

It is the precent craze of the pretty ladies of Vienna's high society to be devoted heart and soul to him and his painted while asleep. Countess Crivek started the bright idea. A well known portraitist who had given her an appoint ment for the sitting has the vicious habit of being late for appointments. Tired of turning over French novels in one chamber, the beautiful countess fell asleep. At last the procrastinating artist turned up. Entranced by the unexpected vision of sleeping heauty, he threw off a lightning sketch, and as the countess awoke held place it was discovered that the bride was it before her astonished eyes. The drawing was so dainty and reductive that the delighted sitter insisted upon a complete oil portrait, painted while she simulated
