To be justice of the South Omaha police court is the end and sum of all devout desires in the hearts of approximately already filed, some are about to file and some are still flirting with the temptation to make a try for the judicial ermine of the police court. James Callanan, the present incumbent, will without doubt run again. The fact that so many candidates are springing up around him seems to indicate that he has not well pleased the powers that be in the democratic party. Against him are aligned John McMillan, John Mercell, journal clerk in the office of the city clerk; W. P. Corrigan, formerly of the police force. Besides these the names of Edward Hanley, barn boss for the Cudany Packing company, and J. E.
