Fiction. VISTAS OF NEW YORK. By Brander Matthews. 242 Pp. 25 cents. Harper &

In this volume Mr. Matthews has gathered twelve of his best stories, written at various times in the last twentysix years. They are human stories about porary doings. And the author of this human people, written with precision and skill in careful scholarly English. Only a few are really New York stories, but all of them are real character sketches.

MAVERICKS. By William MacLeod Raine. 347 Pp. $1.25. G. W. Dillingham

The story of a girl who lived in that frontier world of men, where wideshouldered riders move and have their being under conditions that make hickory withes of them, physically, and hard close-mouthed citizens, mentally. Born and bred to the border life, she looked level-eyed at her lovers and judged them by the outdoor tests of gameness and efficiency. Swept into a series of startling adventures, the story carries Phyllis Sanderson at last to the safe harborage

THE RAID OF THE GUERILLA. By Charles Egbert Craddock. 334 Pp. $1.25. J. B. Lippincott company.

In this collection of ten short stories the conventional love story does not appear. One notes very frequently a strong sense of the humor of situation, but always subtly rather than broadly made manifest, and sometimes glinting with the mocking irony of life. Two of the stories hark back of the civil war for their motives. One of these, that from which the book takes its title, is perhaps the best of the collection.

THE GREAT TAXICAB ROBBERY, By James H. Collins. 141 Pp. 50 cents.

The author has combined an interesting narrative with considerable technical information about thief-catching.

THE CITADEL. By Samuel Merwin. John Garwood is a radical congressman who breaks away from party allegiance, who turns from the machine boss' to fight alone for the political and iniustrial independence of the people he realizes he has so long exploited in Washington. The one who shows him the light is a girl in the biological bureau of the Department of Agriculture, a piquant, womanly woman with an almost masculine directness of intellect. FROM THE SOUTH OF FRANCE. By Thomas A. Janiver. 235 Pp. $1.20. Harper & Bros.

A delightful collection of short stories whose scenes are laid in southern France, characters to tell, of more or less amorous incidents in the lives of middleaged men and women. Mr. Janiver has made such adroit use of provencal characteristics, and has done it in so loving a way that his stories, although they show his people in amusing guise, arouse in the reader only the kindliest feelings toward them

YIDDISH TALES. Translated by Helena Frank. Jewish Publication So-clety of America.

Twenty authors are represented, with from one to half a dozen stories each, only two of them writing in this country Of the others, one tells of life in a little town in Bessarabia and the others are mostly from Poland. All of them have that intimate, poignant touch of reality. And they are all sad, with the weary, hopeless sadness that colors all the fiction that comes from the land of the czar, whether Jewish or not.

THE NAMELESS THING. By Melville Davisson Post. 838 Pp. $1.25. D. Apple-

THE RED NIGHTS OF PARIS. By Goron. 317 Pp. $1.25. G. W. Dillingham

M. Roger Deverly, a rising young architect, is brutally stabbed in his pretty home during the unaccountable absence of his devoted wife. Upon the same night, one Chauffard, a usurer, together with his niece, Georgette, mysteriously disappear from his home. A ghastly hand, identified as Chauffard's, was found in the garden. A month later his body was recovered from the Siene. Two clever and crafty sleuths were put in charge. Wonderful and hair-raising are their adventures, which hold the reader breathless until the murderers have been dis-

He has gone into the major leagues at various angles and various games and taken out matters of most absorbing interest and welded them together into a reading that lures and leads the fan on to the finish without any more interruption than is necessary. Base ball is a thing, with all its heroics, that never palls on a real fan. Its reminiscences are sometimes even more attractive than its contembook has made the most of that.

FOOD FOR THE INVALID AND THE CONVALESCENT. By Winifred Stuart Gibbs. 81 pp. 75 cents. The Macmillan

This little book aims to help both physicians and social workers in their efforts to treat disease and conserve health.

STANDARD PAPER BAG COOKERY. By Emma Paddock Telford. 144 pp. 50 cents. Cupples & Leon company. A practical guide for paper bag cookery so clear and concise that even the inexperienced housekeeper may try this new-old way of cooking foods.

THE HEALTHY BABY. By Roger H. Dennett. 228 pp. $1. The Macmillan company.

This work makes clear to the mother just how to do best the ordinary, everyday things that every mother has to do for her child. In the numerous and valuable suggestions which the book offers parents and teachers alike will find in it suggestive matter.
