Based on Honesty. Mattes, in behalf of the bill, said that New Apportionment it was based on "honesty." He admitted that it was drastic, but contended that drastic measures were necessary. If the taxation of tangible property should continue to prove as unsuccessful as it has. he was of the opinion that he would finally join Senator Quinby in the ranks of the single-taxers.

The member from Otoc hotly denounced the tax-dodgers. Many of them there were, he said, who being Christian gentlemen at all times loudly espoused the principle of rendering unto Ceasar the things that wer Ceasar's and at the same time returned their property at ridiculous low values. Their only excuse was that the other fellow did it. Would it be an excuse for a highwayman to say that somebody else had once waylaid a man? If not, what excuse could a Chrisrobbing the government that protected, and why not pay for governmental protection as well as for the protection afforded by the insurance company, he argued.

Senator Quinby thought that the proposed measure would only serve to increase the unjustness of the present system under which people are daily being driven from their homes.

Sandall of York thought it an attempt to legislate honesty into a certain class of people. Moreover, he was against it as it would increase the burden on tan. ble property and shift the load fro those who have intangible property, the very once who offend the most in the matter of tax-dodging.
