LETTERS MAILED YEARS AGO FOUND

Car Repairer Just Discovers Three Batches of Undelivered Mail When Fixing Car.

SENT OVER FOUR YEARS AGO

Three bunches of undelivered letters and postal cards, some of them mailed over four years ago, have just been discovered behind the woodwork in a railway mail car that was being repaired.

The officials were loth to discuss the case, except to say that responsibility lay with the individual clerks who had handled or misplaced the letters.

Older pieces of mail in the batch just found include a number of Christmas postal cards, all mailed by one person from Boston in 1910.

Although the losses of mail cover several years and occurred while the mail car in question was in use on different lines of the Union Pacific system.

A car repairer at the Union Pacific shops here found the lost mail when he removed the inside woodwork of the car to make repairs.

The letter will send the lost mail to the persons to whom it is addressed, with explanations regarding the long delay.
