HE day is fast approaching when it will be impossible to fool any of the people any of the time.

Secrets are out of fashion.

Big business no longer can be run by a whisper. The people have be-come educated. They want to know the why and the wherefore of the policies of all undertakings and enterprises which touch their daily lives.

That is why the great public service corporations - telephone companies, lighting companies, street car companies, railroadsmust tell more and more about themselves every day.

They touch more people more closely than other enterprises. They seek to serve more people. They want their receipts to increase always.

In reply, the public asks:

"Why should we give you more business? What are you doing for us? What is the reason for this and that?

And the only possible answer is for these organizations to go into the newspapers and display their wares.

One of the biggest corporations in this country suffered for fifteen years, not because it had broken the law, but because its officials ignored public opinion.

The concern which does the biggest busi-ness today is that one about which men and women know most. The policies that can be aired and advertised are the best policies.

If you want more people to ride on your street cars, tell the people why they should meet your wishes.

If you want to install electric lights more widely, teach the public the advantages of electricity.

There was a time when the public service corporation would sit back with the firm conviction that the public would patronize it despite all conditions. That age has passed. Today the corporation must go to the public.

If it doesn't, it loses business and accumulates an unpopularity whose costliness varies anywhere from the loss of patronage to fighting cases in the courts.

The public service corporation must serve the public doubly. It must give the service for which it was organized-and it must tell the public why it deserves recognition.

There's only one way to accomplish thisthe publication of the facts.
