

Birds Begin to Sing When Guns Fired

Correspondence of the Associated Press.
BERLIN, July 27.—Experiments and observations made in between times at the various battle fronts by bird lovers have revealed some striking characteristics of the feathered broods that have not been frightened from their accustomed haunts by the war. Quite as unusual as any other conclusion is the showing that crows, from generations of experience, fear rifle fire, but not artillery fire, while song birds, never having known the fear of the hunter and his rifle, break into song when the guns are fired, but are alarmed at the tremendous explosions of shells. Even the trained artillery horses continue to show more fright at shell explosions than birds. The crows, for instance, do not even trouble to take flight when a shell lands near them but do not explode, and only rise for an instant when it does go off. But when the rifles begin to pop they put as much distance as possible between themselves and the trenches.

Many of the soldiers have canaries in their trenches, and have conducted numerous experiments with them. Usually the discharge of a rifle is a signal for them to sing, and even the sound of breaking glass will bring the same result. The same is true, to a great extent, of the wild songbirds that abound, especially along the French front. The birds, of course, display a sharpness of vision that even a powerful telescope will not equal, and many times the warning of an attack has come first of all from the crows and other birds, rising in alarm at some movement that the entries, for all their watchfulness, had not detected.
