OMAHA MILK IS RATED HIGH

Inspector Bossie Shows How the High Standard for Omaha is Maintained.

BACTERIA AND BUTTERFAT

Dairy and Milk Inspector Bossie, reports that during the year, sixty-one of 1,378 cows tested for tuberculosis were found to be infected to the extent that they were ordered slaughtered. Since the merger of South Omaha, thirty-seven of 303 dairy cows of that district were condemned, after the tuberculin test had been applied, the per cent of infected cows being fifteen, much higher than prevailed in Omaha proper.

Of eighty-six milkmen arrested for violations all but one were convicted, suspended fines being imposed on the first offense.

The report states that out of 352 sediment tests made of bottled milk by the Omaha department and 326 by federal inspectors, only fifty samples showed sediment. A total of 4,222 milk and cream samples were taken during the year, some in conjunction with the federal inspectors, who were here for several weeks. The samples were tested for butter fat, bacteria and adulterations. The cost of the inspector's department for the year was $1,962.

The standard which the bacteria test is applied is that milk having less than 100,000 bacteria per cubic centimeter is regarded as safe, and the relative quality of the milk is based on the variation above or below that standard. Of 840 bacteria tests made 761 were under and seventy-nine were above 100,000. The samples were taken from wagons, restaurants, grocery stores and from residences on request.

Quality of Milk.

Inspector Bossie made the following report of Omaha's milk and cream supply, the first column of figures referring to the bacteria tests and the next column showing the per cent of butter fat found in samples tested:

Keegan Resents Hobo Inference About Jug-Bugs

He wore a red necktie, talked like a woman and walked with mincing steps. He appeared at the city workhouse last night for a "flop," for he asked for "shelter from the weather's inclemency."

"At last," prayfully sighed Ben Keegan, keeper of the place, "at last I've got me one of them things, all to myself, and nobody looking!"

Keegan showed him where to sleep.

"Oh, di, mi!" protested the would-be lodger. "I could never sleep there. I do believe the place is lousy!"

"You do believe it!" repeated Keegan. "You believe it's lousy. After one look you only think so? The joint is lousy! Bum, outside!" and Keegan planted his good foot on that portion of the effeminate geyant's anatomy which is most often kicked at.
