

Lawrence Grossmith in "Nobody Home" - At Boyd's

MAHA had one busy week at the theater, with three nights given over to saying goodbye to Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson, and three to enjoying ourselves with the Coburn Players. No modern player has achieved the fame that is Forbes-Robertson's; he is admittedly the foremost actor of his time, a place won and held by dint of hard work and through the development of a wonderful gift of understanding and expressing the things that appeal to man. It is not so much the subtlety as the simplicity of his art that has made him great. This was made most plain in his presentation of ly his own. No other great actor has taken this part at exactly the pitch assumed by Forbes-Robertson. One or another may have approached him in a point or two; for example, Walker Whiteside gave the role more of a human and less of a mystic quality than any other now recalled save the great star who has just passed from us; in the "sollloguy" Whiteside and Forbes-Robertson were as one. Mr. Sothern endowed, in Omaha at least, the "closet" scene with the tenderness that so distinguished the great English actor; but assumed a task from which more notable and Harris' company for this engagement neither of these Americans was capable actors have shrunk, and have achieved of the sustained excellence that makes thereby something that is just a little the Forbes-Robertson performance such bit more worth while than success that a triumph for the intelligent application is only represented in coin of the realm. of the art of expression to the majestic It may not be that these devoted workthought and sublime poetry of the ers will ever see the day when either Edwin Booth's Hamlet has can say, "Now, I will take mine case," long stood as the standard by which all but they may be sure that if they conothers are gauged, but Mr. Booth, studi- tinue as they have thus far gone, the ous as he was, and accomplished to the theater will be their debtor in the end.

completely by his illumination of the ing delight in a way that is not to be role as does the English actor. Mr. Booth was wont to clothe his Hamlet with something of mystery, a quality accentuated by his seeming to hold frequent communion with the Ghost; this has become "traditional" among American Hamlets, who have copied Booth to the best of their ability, with a result they have only succeeded in exaggerating or distorting the peculiarities of the great American without in any way achieving a close approach to his art. The Forbes-Robertson Hamlet is divested of all the trumpery of tradition, come here with the original cast intact and is endowed with nothing of mystery as presented for six months in New York, or supernatural quality, and in its sim- four months in Boston and three months plicity becomes the noblest and most in Chicago. Just why Forbes-Robertson retains "The Light That Failed," unless it be for "the tired business man," is not explained. It is not worthy the care he bestows upon it. When one recalls Kip- decker, St. Clair Bayfield, Coralle Blythe, ling as a singer of "Barrack Room Ballada" and "Departmental Dittles," and thinks of Mulvany and Ortheris and some of his other heroes, even Mowgli. it is pretty hard to realize that he is guilty of Dick Heldar and Maisle. But he is, and it only goes to prove that the best of us turns out some mighty poor stuff once in a while. The Passing of the Third Floor Back" was well chosen for the final exit of this great actor from our stage. He blessed us with his presence while here and he left us a memory to be cherished. It was a privilege to have seen it, and it will be pleasant always to recall him, in full possession of his faculties, with no diminution of his remarkable power, quietly dominating the stage, and going on to a well earned rest. The public is loath to concede to a favorite actor the right to rest, but Forbes-Robertson has earned it, and with all our regrets at his going, we will follow him into private life with genuine almosrity of wish that he will "live long and prosper."

The Coburns were already well known here by a too-small circle as earnest workers in the higher phases of the theater. They take their profession seriquely, and it is understood in advance that whatever they undertake will be from the theater in a happy frame of mind einging and whistling the haunting melodies. The chorus is composed of very pretty girls who can sing and dance and there will be an augmented orchestra of twenty musicians. Miss Elsie de Wolfe, formerly an actress, designed the scenery and costumes of which there are no two allke. One of the features of the performance is the dancing by Quentin Tod and Helen Clarke, latest "finds" of Elizabeth Marbury, who managed and was largely responsible for the success of the Castles, Mr. Tod and Miss Clarke give exhibitions of a new cake-walk, an ultra fox trot and a modernized one-step.

When the players glibly tell of the success of the country's most advertised successful business houses through their respective publicity mediums, then there hardly need be anything local in the estimate placed upon the work of the play producers who entertain while proving that every line of business is sure to become stagnant unless it is advertised. Cohan will include Elsie Glynn, M. J. Sullivan, Georgette Leland, James I. Mitchell, Dantel A. Anderson, James J. Gardner, Ruby Herriman, H. N. Dudgeon, Felix Mo-Clure, Doris Jordan, Page Spencer and Mason Emerson.

Direct from her long run at the Park theater, New York City, in her new comedy, "33 Washington Square," comes May Irwin, high priestess of mirth and laughter. Miss Irwin brings here the entire original production and cast, and will open her engagement at Boyd's theater for three performances veginning next Friday, with matinee Saturday, "33 Washington Square," is the same comedy that Miss Irwin produced in Washington at a special performance given for the president and the National Press club, taking her whole company to that city, following her letter to Mr. Wilson, suggesting that he establish eral songs, among them such favorites as "My Mother's Rosary," "I've Been Floating Down the Old Green River," and "My Old Kentucky Home." An avalanche of mail orders and reiterated requests over the telephone for seats to the four performances of "Daddy ris' latest farce hit, which ran for one entire year at the George M. The play shows youthful determination crystallning into hardness and obstinacy with the progress of years, and the receptivity to new ideas yielding to unreasoning conservatism. The scene is a drawing result in Kenstnaton Gore. It is 1980 in the first act and the quaint dresses and furniture, the daring of Gertrude in riding alone in a hansom cabriolet, the novelty of the bath room, all strike a plensing note. It is in 1885 when the curtain rises on the second act. Girl clerks, electric lights and telephones are wierd novelties, while young women are forbidden to read "Ouida" and very excusably anxious to see "The Mikado." Another
