

PRESTO CHANGE! UNION MADE HAT MAKES TROUBLE

Dealer's Scissors Secure a Customer, Also a Donation to the American Red Cross.

The hero of this pathetic tale is a hat—a bright, new straw lid with a gaudy band around it and a perky little bow on the side. When we first meet our hero it is reposing on the counter of an Omaha hat store among others of its kind. Enter a customer. A man who is a loyal supporter of union labor. "How much is this hat?" asks the man of a clerk in the hat store, after posing before the mirror with one hat after another perched on his head.

"Three-fifty," replied the clerk shortly.

"I'll take it," said the man. Then he looked into the hat for the union label. It was not there. "I can't take a hat without a union label," he said, handing it back to the clerk.

The clerk looked disappointed. Then he brightened. "I'll fix that," he said. With a pair of scissors he quickly removed the label from another hat on the shelves. A bit of paste, and lo! here was a union made hat where none had existed before.

Customer Visits Connell.

The man took the hat. Without the least hesitation he went straight to the office of D. J. Connell, deputy state labor commissioner, who spends some time in the rooms of the welfare board in the city hall. To him the owner of the hat told the foregoing story.

Next scene is a visit to the hat store proprietor from D. J. Connell. "This is a serious offense," explained Connell. "The least you can expect is a fine of $25 and some most unpleasant publicity. However, if you care to swear solemnly that you will not allow this offense to be repeated in your store, perhaps I can square it for you. In return, a donation of $25 to the Red Cross would express your appreciation admirably."

No undesirable publicity has resulted for the hat store proprietor, the judge before whom the case was laid was most lenient, the oath requested was duly sworn and a Red Cross receipt for $25 made out to the hat store man reposes in Connell's files.
