BALLOON costumes for balloon girls. Why not? Gertrude Kountze, Rowena Pitney and Betty Coit will sell balloons for the Associated Charities' dinner-dance at the Brandeis tea room, September 15. They will wear soft, fluttering costumes of various-colored silk. The skirts will be cut in points at the bottom. To each point a string will be attached and a balloon will float at the end of each string.

Geraldine Hess, who will sell whistles, rattles and confetti, will be dressed in a clown's costume of white satin.

Gretheen Hess and Regina Connell, selling candies and cigars, will be in Spanish costumes.

A black and white satin Pierot suit will be worn by Mildred Weston, who, with Mrs. Naasson Young, will sell candies. Mrs. Young will be a companion to Miss Weston, wearing a Pierotette creation also of black and white satin.

Josephine Schurman and Mildred Rogers will appear as Fatima Turkish girls selling cigars and candies.

No costume affair is complete without a little boy and girl. Mrs. Mayer Spiesberger and Mrs. Phil Wolfson, as charming children, will sell whistles and rattles.

Miss Florence D. Devereux is chairman of the committee which is planning these fantastic, colorful gowns.

Mrs. Clara Swobe and Mrs. Alvin F. Johnson are receiving donations of cigars and candies.

Lewis-Ryan. The marriage of Miss Ethel June Ryan, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William M. Ryan, and Wallace Lewis, son of Mr. and Mrs. S. Arion Lewis, took place Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock at the Memorial church, Rev. O. D. Balfry officiating.

Miss Florence Doll and Lawrence Lewis, brother of the groom, were the only attendants. The bride wore a tailored suit of taupe broadcloth with hat to match.

Relatives and a few intimate friends of the families were present at the ceremony. The wedding supper was served at the Lewis home owing to illness in the family of the bride.

Mr. and Mrs. Lewis will reside at 724 and Pacific street.

Omaha Woman's Club Luncheon. More than 100 reservations were made for the Omaha Woman's club luncheon Wednesday at the Pricett Mile club. The flowers formed the table decorations.

Following the luncheon Mrs. Philip Potter, vice president of the club and chairman of the ways and means committee, gave a report of the progress made in the campaign for funds for the new club house.

Readings were given by Mrs. John Haarmann and vocal solos by Mrs. E. B. McQuillan, accompanied by Mrs. Ray Abbott. Vocal selections were also given by a quartet comprising Mesdames Burton, Lard, M. Williams.

Mrs. Charles Johannes, president of the club, presided.

Mrs. Palmer Remains East. Harry O. Palmer returned Tuesday from Sandwich, N. H. His mother, Mrs. Alna Palmer, will remain in Boston for the winter with her son, Arthur L. Palmer.

Palmer and her son are at Plymouth, Mass., today, guests of Elder Brewster, direct lineal descendant of Elder Brewster, who was pastor of the little flock that landed there in 1620. Following the visit at Plymouth, Mrs. Palmer will go to Cape Cod and later to Boston.

Sandwich, N. H., seems far removed from Omaha, but Mr. Harry Palmer found some crossing of interests. He gave a lecture in the Methodist church there one Sunday night, and after the meeting met the mother of Austin Gray, who married Eleanor Mackay of Omaha. Sandwich was formerly the home of Robert F. Leavens, recent pastor of the Unitarian church of Omaha.

Alpha Chi Omega. A luncheon will be given Friday at Olive Crest by Alpha Chi Omega sorority. Covers will be placed for 30. The out-of-town guests will include Mesdames Barton, Whitmore and Webster, Mesdames Burton, Whitmore and Mrs. Johnson, and Miss Frances Whitmore, all of Valley, Neb.; Miss Delia Robinson of Waterloo, Neb.; Mrs. Frank Mattes and Miss Hannah McCordale of Odebolt, Ia.; Misses Frances Hansen, Lois Melton, Vivian Hansen and Lois Boone, all of Lincoln. Problems That Perplex Answered by BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Why So Exclusive? Dear Miss Fairfax: There is a man in the office where I work who often tells me he likes me. He has asked me out to show, but I refused, because he often speaks of another girl. But lately he told me he gave her up. From other people I hear he still goes with her. And it happens he takes her out on the days he asks me. Would you please tell me what to do and what you think?

ANXIOUS F. Well, if you will not accept his invitations naturally he would take out some other girl. Why do you insist upon being the only girl friend he may have? There's nothing wrong if a man has several girl friends whom he likes to take out.

Just a Girl: I have not known of "Junior" being used for a girl unless the mother is famous and has used her name in the same way as the daughter. This is no way to distinguish between father and son where the names are the same, but with mother and daughter the "Mrs." and "Miss" tells the story.

Mme. Louise Homer, famous singer, however, has a daughter who is frequently called Louise Homer, Jr. Please don't ask me to advise girls to bob their hair. Personally, I like it on many girls, especially when they take good care of it after it is bobbed. But the subject seems to be one of great feeling in some families and hardly a subject for an outsider to decide. I think you would have to use an iron to keep your hair curled.

From 115 to 120 pounds would be correct weight for you.

Happy: The only way to meet the girl properly is by securing an introduction. Perhaps your mother would help you out by calling on the girl's mother (if they are new neighbors). If you could meet the girl's mother, it would be a simple matter to meet her. If you go to the same parties, which your letter indicates you do, you surely can find a mutual friend who will introduce you, unless you are very faint-hearted.

Housewife: I suggest that you consult a druggist about the flea. A strong disinfectant is the thing to use.

Puzzled: Yes, do send wedding invitations to the groom's family. They may wish them for keepsakes and, besides this, they are entitled to the courtesy of a formal invitation.

HOLDING A HUSBAND "Revelations of a Wife"

The Way Madge Broke the News to Dr. Pettit. Dicky set Junior down precipitately. His face was black with anger, and I knew that he meant to dash out and call to account the man from across the road who had frightened me.

I caught him by the arm and held him firmly. "Oh, Dicky, don't say a word to him!" I pleaded. "Let him go, See, he's walking along harmlessly enough now. I don't want to make him any angrier than he is. He thinks he has reason for his anger at me, anyway."

Dicky was twisting his arm away from me, ignoring my admonition, but his mother placed herself in front of him in such abrupt fashion that he could not move without thrusting either her or me aside with actual physical force.

"Margaret is right, Richard," she said authoritatively. "There's no use stirring up a dangerous animal, and that's what that man is. He is going along peacefully enough now, but the time to conquer a dangerous animal is when he shows his fangs. Dicky retorted. "But, of course, if you two have decided he must not be disciplined, why, I'll not butt in. But who is he, and why the savage growl he displayed just now?"

I explained briefly that he was the man who lived across the road from the Tier farm, and who had beaten his wife so savagely the day of our arrival there. Dicky listened quietly to my story of driving the little family to the hospital, and of the man's subsequent incarceration in the jail for a day, and of his release upon suspended sentence. For a long minute after I had ceased talking he did not speak. Then he asked a single question.

"Dicky Reassures Madge. "He," the lad whose horses plumped over Marion and Junior, isn't he?" "Yes," I returned, "but I don't think he intended that."

"Just get one thing firmly planted in your brain, my dear," he retorted loftily, "and that is, there's no limit to the devilry one of those animals can evolve from his aboriginal inferiority. He's evidently planted firmly in his cosmos the idea that you're responsible for his jailing. I'll just keep an eye on that lad. He'll be watching, though he probably won't dare do anything until the memory of his last adventure dies down. But he'll Junior away from his vicinity. He could easily manage some accident to the child in which his own skirts would be entirely clear."

He had picked up our little lad a few seconds before and was rapidly striding homeward. But at his last words I stopped him long enough to bestow a convulsive hug upon my small son, for the least hint of any danger to him makes every nerve quiver. Dicky patted my shoulder reassuringly.

"Don't get so white," he said compassionately. "He wouldn't dare to do anything overt. Just keep the child on his own side of the road and it will be all right."

We hurried on to the shelter of Mrs. Jicer's sitting room, and for the rest of the day—having a flying visit I made to the hospital, finding Marion much improved, and her mother less restless—more animated than she had been—I hovered over my little lad with my mother-in-law's openly expressed disgust.

"If you'd spread a little of that over some of the times when you went away with Richard with never a thought for the blessed darling of this morning, for instance—it would be more to the point," she said caustically, and though I knew that her choleric reprimand principally from the fact that Junior will hardly look at her when I am near him, her words stung me deeply, nevertheless.

Dicky came to the rescue, as he generally does when he is in a good humor. "Now, mother, this morning was my fault," he said, "I've got to have Madge go with me tonight, too. Appletton's down in this vicinity, and I've got to give a little dinner tonight. But don't hold it up against Madge. Blame me, I'm a good guy."

"I'm not aware that I have ever blamed Margaret for anything which was not her fault," his mother said icily. "As for your dinner, go ahead, both of you. I think I'm perfectly capable of taking care of my grandchild."

"Who's Machiavel, now?" I whispered, as his mother frowned out of the room.

"Well, Appletton is at Southampton, and I have to give this dinner," he retorted with a defiant grin. "I can't help it that the two facts are not related, can I?"

"No, but you can help being late for the dinner," I said, "which you will be if you delay dressing much longer."

"You're right, as usual. 'Light of My Eyes,'" he laughed, and we both hurried through our dressing, arriving at the quiet old inn, in Shelter Island, just as Dr. Pettit drove up with Claire Foster beside him. The girl immediately monopolized Dicky's attention, as I had counted on her doing, and I had the opportunity I wished to speak confidentially to Dr. Pettit.

"I must tell you something which may shock and displease you, doctor," I said hurriedly.

He looked inquiringly at me. "The guest whom you have been asked to meet is Grace Draper," I said slowly.

Things You'll Love To Make. New Scalloped Nightgown.

Need a nightgown have a straight hem? Here is a new scalloped nightgown that proves it must not. Cut the bottom of the gown in scallops (large or small, according to your own taste). Face these scallops with a six-inch facing. A pale pink or blue facing is attractive. Finish the edges of the scallops with narrow fllet lace or a fine corded edge. A new scalloped nightgown together with a petticoat and bloomers to match makes a handsome set.

NOW A FOLLY TO HAVE CORNS Millions of People Know An Easy Way to End Them—Quick and Sure

Folks all about you now treat corns in this scientific way. That's why corns are becoming so uncommon. At the first corn pain they apply Blue-jay—the liquid or the plaster—for sale at all druggists. The pain stops instantly. Soon the whole corn gently loosens and comes out.

This is not like old ways, harsh and crude. It is the modern method, put out by a laboratory of world-wide repute.

For millions of people it has solved the corn problem. It will bring you freedom—and forever—when you know it. For your own sake, find this out tonight.
