What's What

By HELEN DECIE

Plain post cards are used only to convey brief and businesslike messages. These cards cost one-half the postage required for ordinary letters.

For this reason, as well as for the accompanying economy of time, mimeographed, printed or written post cards are customarily utilized for notices of meetings.

It is not good form to write a personal note on a government postal. Hasty travelers have made a convenient exception of the omnipresent pictorial cards, which, although quite as public as the official postals are frequently used to send messages concerning safe arrival, etc. But the ultra-conservative persons, even when they are hurried, prefer to take an extra minute of time and an extra pennyworth of postage to include the card in an addressed envelope. This may be a wise precaution if the message is at all confidential, and if the open card would be likely to come under the inspection of inquisitive eyes.

Problems That Perplex

Answered by BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

The Lure of Money.
Dear Miss Fairfax: I am 25. Have been thinking about marriage for the last few years, but finding a real companion is so difficult that I feel inclined to give it up.

I have met many girls. Every one glad to meet me and ready to help me waste my earnings. Most of them would have considered being a loving wife, if I could provide an absolutely comfortable home. Money seems to be the absorbing idea.

Not long ago I had the opportunity of reading one of the interesting articles of yours about "home makers and home wreckers." Wonder whether the former class has been extinguished. If it has not could you give advice in the search for a faithful mate?

I am a small wage earner. Money never lured me, and hope it never will. I have lots of ambition, but no money. Through it is difficult to find a person who will agree with me in that particular light. I do not doubt there might be some one.

We are living in a period of physical rather than spiritual longings. But not everyone contributes to this atmosphere. Probably the very girls who attract you are the ones of whom you cannot approve, for you must subconsciously feel that they won't be satisfied with the simple things you can provide. I've an idea that if you were to bestir yourself and work hard to earn some of the things you desire, instead of sitting back and approving of yourself because your ideals are above those of your mercenary acquaintances, you would be better off. We all get what we want in this world "provided only we have the idea firmly enough—and hustle."

Putting Love to the Test.
Dear Miss Fairfax: I have been going about with a man of 25 since last summer. I am 19. When I am in his company he seems to care for me but I never find out how much he cares for me before I go. I must find out how much he cares for me. Now, how can I? Please advise me.

ANXIOS.
The fact of your near departure may bring the man to a realization of his feelings. If you are willing to risk everything and are sure enough to want him to be sure and tell you honestly if he doesn't feel as you do, then you might talk the matter over without mental reservation. You can't perform miracles—but you can stake everything on absolute frankness and a brave standing by your feelings.

Might or Wrong Here?
Dear Miss Fairfax: I am an only daughter, with five brothers, and we have no mother, so that on a matter of this kind I have no one to go to, and wish you would please advise me.

During my high school days I became friends with one of my school-mates. His friendship increased during his college days. He has just graduated and started out in the business world. During his college days was the only girl to ever invite him to any of the school affairs. There has never been any talk between us of love, but all our friends, both his and mine, believe we are engaged and tease me about my announcing it now that he is through with his studies. At all affairs we two are coupled together and every one always speaks of us two as being engaged.

This he of course, keeping other men away from our home. I do care much for this young man, but I do not like the embarrassment. I am sure they must say the same things to him, and if he were serious don't you think he ought to say something to me? I am not anxious to marry now and would be perfectly willing to wait until he is settled as long as there was some understanding between us. I can't speak to him on the matter. Do you think anyone in my family should, in a tactful way, I don't want to, but know my brother wants to.

R. M.
Probably the reason for the young man's silence is his financial situation. I suppose he isn't in a position to marry. Either bride or stubbornness may be keeping him from asking you to wait. But in any case he is either selfish and indifferent to the position in which he is putting you, or he doesn't care for you except as a friend. I see no reason why you shouldn't permit one of your brothers to approach him tactfully on the subject. If the man does care for you your brother's asking him about his feelings for you won't destroy them. If he doesn't care you'll be better off knowing it now and not going on with the weaving of dreams about the wrong here.

Out of the Running.
"Really, you know," he drawled, "I can't decide whether to marry a merely beautiful girl or a girl with brains."
"I'm afraid," she told him gently, "that you will never marry either."
"Oh, why not?" he demanded.
"Why, she explained kindly, "a beautiful girl could do better and a girl with brains would know better."

Things You'll Love To Make.
Ribbon Trimmed Curtains
Ribbon-trimmed curtains are easy to make and look so charming on bedroom windows. Make simple curtains of voile or marquisette. Draw sufficient material to hang the hemstitching three-eighths inch wide. Make double hemstitching. Use one-fourth inch ribbon of a color to harmonize with the color scheme of the room. Run the ribbon through the hemstitching on the side and bottom. Finish the corner with a flower made of loops of the ribbon. These ribbon-trimmed curtains are lovely in their simplicity.
