

The Girl Who Listens to Mother

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

"Bess is a mighty pretty girl," confided young Donald. "And I used to like her pretty well. But I can't be bothered with her any more. She's too big a baby. Honestly, she hasn't a mind of her own. She can't do a thing without stopping to think how her mother is going to feel about it first. It spoils everything."

"What does it spoil?" I asked with an elaborate air of innocence. "Oh, everything," replied young Donald, waving his hand largely out to space. "She won't go canoeing because her mother has a fit on account of her not knowing how to swim. She hasn't learned to smoke like the rest of the girls in her set because her mother doesn't approve. She always breaks up the party hours before anyone else wants to go home because her mother hates to have her out after 1 o'clock at the latest. Honestly, she's a fool about the old lady."

"Are you sure she isn't just a considerate, thoughtful girl with a deep respect for the opinions and feelings of an older woman who happens to be her mother and to have her love?" I asked.

"Nonsense!" said young Donald with the engaging smile that robs his words of all rudeness. "Bess ought to have a few opinions of her own. She has a right to her own life. Why should she let herself be held back from everything she wants to do by an old lady who's lived her life? Answer me that."

And I did. Like this:

"If Bess had something vital in her nature demanding expression—and her mother were trying to interfere with that, I'd be inclined to fight for the right of each individual to find itself and express itself. If the girl longed to write and her mother insisted that a woman's place is in the home, I'd want Bess to stand up for the girl she had in her to use and needed to use in order to be true to herself."

"Bess were deeply in love with some fine young fellow, and her mother wanted to marry her girl off to an unwelcome suitor with money, I'd hate to have the girl sacrifice herself. . . . In other words, if anything big and vital were at stake, I'd feel strongly that the new generation must have its chance, that youth must be served and that the individual has a right to her turn."

"All love must learn to bear and forbear. Without consideration and courtesy, love cannot live. Each of us must sacrifice something of our own personality in order to live side by side happily with other personalities. In demanding 'elbow room' for our own lives and living, we have also to recognize that other folks also need 'elbow room.'"

"No one can insist on expressing his personality to the exclusion of everybody's else rights of self-expression. That's true for all friendship as well as for all love."

"Now, in the case of a girl and her mother, all this becomes doubly and triply and 1,000 times true. Even allowing for the modern consciousness that parents owe more to children than children to parents—even recognizing that the world leans forward toward the new generation, not back to the old, there must still be a generosity on the part of youth, with life ahead of it to age with so much behind. Youth has the privilege of profiting by the experience of age. Age has an obligation to give youth the benefit of its knowledge."

"And so, when a girl's mother wants her to keep out of danger she isn't equipped to meet, and avoid habits she can gain nothing by forming, the girl can well afford to listen. She needn't stop to figure it all out for herself. She can pretty much feel that mother's advice is safe to follow."

"Common sense and efficiency suggest that Bess does well to listen to her mother. And love and chivalry and fine feelings say that the girl who respects her mother's wishes, and cares more about pleasing mother than about catering to some heedless, pleasure-mad youth, is a pretty good sort. It would be a fine thing if there were more of her. It might be well if the Donalds of this world knew her better—studied her and the mother who commands so much of love and respect."

Things You'll Love To Make.
Hand Embroidered Socks
Hand embroidered socks are very sweet with little party frocks. You can make these yourself. Take any plain silk socks. At intervals over the socks embroider small rosebuds in pink, blue or yellow silk. It would be lovely to have a pair of hand embroidered socks to match each wee frock.

Currant Conserve.
This is a mixture of currants, raisins and oranges. Peel and slice the oranges. Place them in a preserving kettle and cover with a layer of granulated sugar, about a cupful to each thick layer of sliced oranges. Add one thick layer of seeded raisins and cover all with currants carefully picked from the stems, but not washed. Add sugar to the currants in the proportion of a cup of sugar to a pint of the berries. Put on the back of the stove until the conserve has been slowly heated through and the juice of the fruits liberated. Then let it simmer gently until it is cooked down to a thick jam-like consistency. This conserve is very good to eat as a jam, to serve with meat and to make a filling for a layer cake or an addition to plain puddings.

Morning Visit to the Ice Box

On the morning visit to the icebox remove the cake of fat on the chicken soup, take out the bones and vegetables, chop the latter and return to the soup, with a seasoning of salt and paprika to suit the individual taste. Clarify the chicken fat on the soup, and you may use it for all frying purposes and many culinary ones as well.

This getting every particle of edible material out of our food supplies will help cut down your food budget as nothing else will.

The remnants of the tongue may be used to advantage in the making of a tongue omelet for breakfast, and cook the root end of the tongue with dried beans, peas or fresh spinach, as the basis of another soup for the following day. When this is done, be careful of the amount of salt added to the soup, as there is a good deal of this condiment in the tongue.

Crumb Muffins.
These are excellent as a means for using up left over bread. Mix together one cup of dried ground head crumbs, half a cupful of bread flour, two cupfuls of bran and one teaspoonful of salt. Beat one egg lightly and add to the dry ingredients with two cupfuls of buttermilk in which have been blended seven-eighths of a teaspoonful of baking soda and two tablespoonfuls of dark molasses. Beat well, pour into well oiled gem pans and bake about 25 minutes in a moderate oven.

Honey Cream Dressing.
Beat the yolks of four eggs until lemon colored and pour on them half a cupful of boiling honey. Place over hot water, stir constantly for a couple of minutes and remove from the fire. Cool and add the juice of one lemon, one-third of a teaspoonful of salt, a quarter of a teaspoonful of paprika and one cupful of heavy

Milk Desserts.
Have more milk desserts for the family and thus accomplish a successful and inconspicuous way of inducing finicky children to take their share of milk. Perhaps the easiest dessert to make from milk is the old-fashioned English junket, simply milk curd separated by rennet as in cheese making and eaten before the bacteria that give cheese its flavor develop.

There are a number of preparations of rennet in liquid and tablet form on the market. The milk is flavored, sweetened and heated lukewarm, when the amount of rennet indicated is added. Vanilla is often used, but chocolate, caramel and other flavors are sometimes better liked. This dessert can be made in a few minutes.

Lady Gregory, the famous Irish dramatist, wrote her first play when she was 52 years of age.

An Ironing Hint.
When the old-fashioned flatiron is used it saves fuel if the irons are covered with a pan or skillet. Invert the skillet over the group of irons. The irons are heated through more thoroughly and do not need to be changed as frequently.

In East India a woman of high caste leads the life of a recluse.
