Common Sense

Learn How to Express Yourself. Do you cultivate a firm, controlled, you should show it by getting command of yourself first.

None willingly, knowingly, raises a voice to a tone which makes a laughing stock of the speaker. If you realized it about yourself ou would not do it. Very often the tense, strident voice is a sign of a highly nervous state which needs rest and quiet, and perhaps medical attention.

If you want results which are favorable to your way of thinking you must control your voice in speaking. Sounds, musical or otherwise, exert a vastly greater influence on those around us or under our control than we think. In pleasing the ear we gain greater control Don't make your tones so soothing or monotonous that you put anyone to sleep unless that is your purpose, but make your voice do as much as your words towards controlling those under you.
