

Car Men's Stand On Strike to Be Shown Saturday

Action in Voting Down Acceptance of Pay Cut No Indication of Attitude Toward Walkout.

The vote of union street car men to reject the 7-cent hourly wage reduction, effective today, is no indication of how a strike vote would go, according to car men interviewed yesterday.

"We were voting on whether or not we favored accepting a decrease of a fraction over 12 per cent," explained the conductor on a Park line car. "Naturally very few of the men favored a reduction."

Company Has Advantage.

Other car men, and even one union official, have in the past few days admitted that the company apparently has the "upper hand" in the present controversy. They pointed out that unemployment, added to the approach of winter, gives the company a great advantage in forcing the cut, and makes a strike practically impossible.

2 to 1 Against Cut.

Two union meetings, one in the morning and one in the evening, at Central Labor temple, are scheduled for Saturday, the day the wage decrease becomes effective. The men's attitude toward taking a strike vote will be learned at this meeting. Anton Rubick, president of the union, said:

More Truth Than Poetry

By JAMES J. MONTAGUE

NOT SO RED AS THEY ARE PAINTED

We have seen the soulless savage who was wont to raid and ravage. When the emigrant was crossing of the plain; We have seen the wild Apaches garner perfect strangers' thatches. Unregardful of their piercing shrieks of pain. We have seen hard-faced Comanches selling beads on western ranches—

Every sort and kind of redskin we have seen. And it's been our observation that no brave, of any nation Looked a bit like those who act upon the screen.

When in movie-shows we've met 'em, we have wondered where they get 'em.

They are neither Sioux nor Bannocks, Utes or Crows. Many of these curious creatures have the flattened facial features That one often sees on Chinks or Esquimos. Though arrayed in fringed leathers, or adorned with eagle feathers, Or in Nature's simple costume lightly dressed, Or in con skins, frayed and ravelled, it is plain to one who's traveled, That they're surely not productions of the west.

Now and then we think we've spied one—a low-built and amber-eyed one.

Who was like the lads that hail from Turkestan; And again we've suspected that these red men were selected From the teeming population of Japan.

But in six of seven cases, as we gazed upon their faces As the drama unfolded slowly from the red. We are sure these fierce Apaches and the like were caught in Natchez, Or in Baton Rouge, New Orleans or Mobile.

Speech in movies is not vital, so there's not in any title Any means to spot these birds by word of mouth; Yet their gait is slow and heavy, and suggestive of the leech, And their faces bring to mind the Sunny South.

And we'll bet our trusty flivver that these sons of plain and river. When they once have washed the war-paint off their maps Wander out behind the village they have had to burn and pillage And devote a leisure hour or so to craps!

PEACE INDEED.

Mrs. Nolte asserts she also is of the seventh generation from Prince Anneka, who gave up the sovereignty for love.
