"Something Greater"

"A great merchandise event fittingly named," is the way a successful business man described our Progress Sale as he watched the mighty throngs of people pass through our doors Monday. It was, indeed, as admitted on all sides, a wonderful event. Do you know the thoughts uppermost with the men and women who were in charge of this great sale? Naturally you would think they related to barter and trade and profit. But even business people are human and readily touched by the things that play upon the heart strings.

The men and women in charge of this sale well know that none of these things, this ten-story building with its beautiful floors, its great array of merchandise, its enormous patronage, would have been possible had it not been for the splendid response and encouragement this great community has at all times given to this institution.

If "Progress" has been our watchword, the community has been quick to recognize the fact and to help in the realization of the aspirations and the ideals of the founders of this great establishment.

Read this page carefully. It will only in a small degree reveal the measure of the offerings The Brandeis Store will bring forth during the Great Progress Sale. Each day new bargains will be offered. Each day will be almost a separate celebration in itself. Watch the newspapers every day for new bargains. We know that the way for The Brandeis Store to prosper is through the prosperity of its customers in opportunities for the purchase of the things they need at the prices they must have.

But with it all we know—as all men and women of experience know—that there is something above the making of money, something greater than barter and trade. In this expression of our deep and genuine gratitude for the progress we have made, may we be permitted to say that the profits we shall reap during this great sale will be to us of small consequence in comparison with the bigger fact that we have made our great army of customers glad in the same spirit that we are glad at this milestone of our Progress.
