

Miss Kiplinger Weds Charles Allison

St. John's Catholic church was bright with candles and yellow chrysanthemums against the green of palms and anemones Wednesday night when Miss Dorothy Kiplinger became the bride of Charles Allison.

Following the ushers, Donald Kiplinger, Douglas Peters, Lewis Burgess, Ray Millard, Paul Shirley and Burdette Kirkendall, came Miss Dorothy Judson, gowned in velvet of a rose peach shade.

The bride's dress was distinctive, being of white velvet, made with a pearl grain and a low jenny neck. A train three and a half yards long fell from her shoulders, and her tulle veil fell from a head dress of strands of pearls.

Miss Kiplinger wore her hair high which gave an added impression of height and dignity. She carried a shower bouquet of orchids and lilies of the valley. The bride was given away by her father, Mr. O. D. Kiplinger.

Miss Allison's best man was Albert Sibirsen. During the ceremony, which was performed by Rev. Father J. F. McCarthy, Miss Margaret Judge played the Angels' Serenade.

The bridesmaids wore tulle hats to match their dresses, all made with soft tulle folds over the brims which flared on the left side. They were trimmed with a single ostrich plume. The bridesmaids' dresses were sleeveless, cut with low jenny neck, draped skirts and made long on one side to give an effect of a small side train. The matron of honor alone wore a short straight cut gown.

The wedding was followed by a reception at the home of the bride. Assisting Mrs. Kiplinger were Mrs. Ed Creighton, the Misses Ellen Creighton, Gladys Peters, Daphne Peters and Shirley Moore. Mrs. Kiplinger wore black chintilly lace trimmed with jet, and Mrs. C. C. Allison, the mother of the groom, wore white satin with pearl trimmings.

The groom's gift to the bride was a diamond and emerald bar pin. To her bridesmaids Miss Kiplinger gave small head bags to carry with evening dress, while Mr. Allison presented to his sisters were gold monogrammed, black silk cigaret cases.

Mrs. Allison's traveling costume was a three-piece suit of brown duvetyne trimmed with beaver, and a brown velvet hat. After their wedding trip Mr. and Mrs. Allison will be at home in their new house, which is being built for them by Mrs. Allison as a wedding gift. It is at 366 South Fifty-second street.

Drama League

Percy Mackaye, American dramatist, writer of pageants, poetry and books, and a lecturer of note, will come to Omaha Thursday, November 3, for a lecture-recital under the auspices of the Drama League.

Mr. Mackaye is one of the best known figures in the theater world today. He has lectured at Harvard, Yale, Columbia and other universities on the theater. His "Bird Masque Sanctuary" will long be remembered by Omahans who witnessed the dedication ceremonies of the Forum theater reserve a few years ago when his charming pageant was presented by the Omaha talent.

Mr. Mackaye is deeply interested in community drama and has written a number of pageants. He is the sixth artist of note secured by the Drama League of Omaha for its program this year. Because of Mr. Mackaye's prominence the league gladly accepted this booking of November 3, though it follows closely the performances of Tony Sarg's marionettes at the Brandeis. Mr. Mackaye will give readings from his own plays and also speak on the community drama movement at the present time in this country.

Problems That Perplex

Answered by BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Popping the Question. Dear Miss Fairfax: I am in love with a girl who has had many suitors, and now that I feel it is time for me to propose I wish you would give me a few hints as to the right way to do it, for she is most particular and if I do not do it in a certain way I am afraid she might think I am boobish and reject me. I leave this vital matter in your hands and hope to see my reply soon. I will be glad when I see her to restrain from asking her to be my wife. JIMMY.

That's something you would better do on impulse, Jimmy. Better be awkward and genuinely impulsive than have the prettiest speech and bow or a bonded knee when the question is to be popped.

Beware of Sisters-in-Law. Dear Miss Fairfax: I am a girl of 17. I have been going with a fellow of 19. I am Italian and he is Polish. I met his sister one day and she told me different things about her brother. I did not believe her. And kept peace with him. In spite of what she had said I love and worship him more. But one day she told me to put his love to a test and see if he would fill his promise. Some time passed and he didn't make his promise good. At this I believed his sister and broke up with him.

Did I do right or wrong? If you were in my place what would you have done? A READER. I would have believed this man, as I would believe anybody, until he had proven unworthy. You do wrong when you lend an ear to evil tales about anyone.

My Marriage Problems

Adèle Garrison's New Phase of "REVELATIONS OF A WIFE"

The Astounding Quest on the Strange Woman Asked. I think in Robert Savarin's mind, as in mine, there was no thought of pity for the queer woman we had found painting in the middle of the Woodstock village road, and who now was sobbing in the tonneau of the car with Lillian ready to rush around her, Lillian's tender hands stroking her head.

We had so guarded Lillian in her long convalescence that nothing unpleasant had come near her, and here was an outbreak, violent and hysterical, that was extremely likely to upset her. But we both knew Lillian well enough to realize that the only thing we could do to end the situation was to relieve the cause, whatever it might be, of the bizarre-looking creature's emotion.

"Let's drive on a bit, Robert," Lillian said softly. "We'll be out of the village in another hour or two, and can talk without attracting attention."

He did as she suggested, and by the time we had reached a spot where there were no more people, the sobs of the woman had quieted, and she was hunting madly in the bag at her waist for something she evidently desired greatly.

"Don't let him turn around," she whispered to Lillian, and then I saw that her tears had made dirty furrows in her rouge and powder, and that she had taken from her bag a small mirror and the necessary materials for replenishing her complexion.

"He won't," Lillian whispered back, and I saw her eyes stray to Robert Savarin's face. The look upon his presence brings to it, and I only guessed that she was comparing this man who adored her as she was and for herself with Harry Underwood, at whose demand she had for so many years disguised her real self with atrocious make-up, as the poor soul was now doing in a vain effort to keep the youth that had long fled.

"If He Would—" "You must think I'm a yellow quitter and an awful fool, Lillian," she said, from the moment she had looked to the side of the car she had ignored me as if I were not present, and I guessed that the sight of any younger woman who did not need make-up angered her—"I have seen plenty of your type. "But to tell you the truth, I'm just about at the end of everything. I haven't sold a picture in ages, but I've got a lot of 'em hung in an auction sale the colony's giving today over at the art gallery. I thought it would be a good advertising stunt to sit down there in the middle of the road and paint. Lots of others do it at different times, because there's a splendid view of the mountain range precisely that spot. But I figured further that because there are a lot of people here today from all the summer resorts to attend the auction—some of 'em have come 75 miles—might want to see some of my pictures after having nearly run me down. But if this is Mr. Savarin—and he would—'even her audacity faltered at Robert Savarin's uncompromising back.

"What would?" Lillian asked non-committally. "Why, you see, everybody who knows anything about art knows who Robert Savarin is," Mrs. Rundle returned. "And I thought that if he'd just go into the auction and bid on one of my pictures—the money would be paid to me, and I could return it to him if nobody else bid him up—why, then, if they knew who he was, lots of people would bid over him, because they would know he knew a good thing, and—"

Flashing Eyes. Her eyes went down before the fire in Lillian's. "And you would ask him to prostitute his knowledge of art, his reputation, to sell your pictures!" Lillian began stormily. Anything concerning the honor of any one dear to her rouses her like a tigress. Mrs. Rundle gave a little moan as of absolute despair. "All right," she said with surprising meekness. "That's over. I suppose he couldn't. But," with the desperation of a woman fighting for her child, "they are good. I think he'd say so himself if he saw them. Won't he just come in and see 'em? Then if he'd just say his real opinion of them so people could hear, it would help. I'm actually hungry, Lillian."

Lillian's response was quick, contrite. "I am sorry to have to hurt you, Eleanor," she said tenderly. "But your first request was out of the question, you know. The last one, however—Robert—what?"

Robert Savarin turned in his seat, his eyes on Lillian's compassionate face. He absolutely ignored the other woman crouching in her corner with her eyes hungrily watching him. "I am at your service in anything you wish to do, Lillian," he said. "Pray command me."

"Madge, you don't mind going into the auction, do you?" she asked, with the tenderness which never fails to come at my quick assent she flashed a smile at Robert Savarin. "Then, Robert, if you will drive us back to the auction we'll look at Eleanor's pictures, and see what can be done," she said briskly. "Pull yourself together, Eleanor, we'll fix things up for you somehow."
