

Irish Crisis Bars
Lloyd George's
Journey to U. S.

English Prime Minister Probably Will Be Forced to Abandon Trip to Arms Meet, Report.

London, Oct. 27.—Prime Minister Lloyd George probably will have to abandon his visit to Washington, or at least postpone it until the closing sessions of the conference there because of the critical situation in the negotiations with Sinn Fein Ireland, it was asserted by several well informed newspapers here today.

Various reports concerning the Irish negotiations were current here today, but they carried little weight owing to the secrecy observed by both sides. The Daily Graphic printed a rumor that the negotiations had been suspended.

It was said the Daily representatives were insistently urging the claims of the Catholic populations of the counties of Tyrone and Fermanagh for inclusion in southern Ireland.

In the meantime the restiveness of the English unionists was manifestly increasing and although many unionist members of Parliament still refused to subscribe to the proposed vote of censure of the government, their suspicions toward the negotiations were said to be growing.

Newspapers which at first minimized the importance of this unionist "revolt," are treating it more seriously today.

Mr. Lloyd George today proposed to the House of Commons that it set aside next Monday for a discussion on the motion of unionist members of Parliament condemning the present negotiations with representatives of Sinn Fein Ireland. He said he hoped there would be a vote on the question.

Jack and Jill

"You know that letter I gave you last Monday morning—Jill reminded me, passing the chowder which he liked so well.

"Yep," he said absently.

"It was a letter to Aunt Mary Frances."

"So?"

"Why Jack, you know it was a letter to Mary Frances. I told you so when I gave it to you, and—"

"Oh, yes, I remember."

He hungrily attacked the chowder.

"And I asked Mary Frances to be sure to let me know by return mail about that pattern, and I haven't head a word from her. That's almost a week and—"

"But—"

"That's almost a week," went on Jill relentlessly, with a stern glint in her pretty blue eyes, "and I wonder why she doesn't answer."

"Maybe she's sick," Jack said dreamily.

"Sick! The ideal Jack, you know perfectly well that Aunt Mary Frances is never sick."

"Maybe she's gone away on a visit."

"Without telephoning out to tell us? That's too absurd."

"Perhaps—"

"Lood here, Jack, did you mail that letter?"

"Sure," he said boldly, looking her right in the eye. But then, that proved nothing, for Jack always looked her brazenly in the eye when he was guilty. That time that he swore he had cut the wood for the fireplace only two days before, for instance. And he had never even gone down cellar. Just clean forgotten it that's all.

"Jack, look in your inside pocket this minute. I feel almost sure you forgot Aunt Mary Frances' letter."

"Did nothing of the kind, Jill. I positively mailed it. Give me some more chowder."

"Well, if you mailed it—"

"I said I did."

But when dinner was finished he rose hastily and nimbled something about his cargaret in his overcoat pocket and hurried out into the hall. Jill heard him fussing with the coat and she frowned crossly. So—he had forgotten the letter after all, and was fishing to recover it now, she thought.

He came back jauntily, which indicated his guilt more plainly.

"Come on," she said sternly. "Confess."

"Confess what?"

"Didn't you find that letter to Aunt Mary Frances in your coat pocket just now?"

"Confess!"

"I tell you I mailed it last Monday."

The telephone bell thrilled.

And lo, it was Aunt Mary Frances and she had really been away on a visit, and was at the station right this minute.

So Jill asked about the pattern and finally hung up.

"Oh, honey, forgive me for being so naughty. I know you mailed the letter all right, dearest, and Aunt Mary Frances will find it when she gets home tonight. But no matter, I learned about the pattern and everything's all right. Will Jack forgive his bad, naughty, old wife for being so suspicious? Why, Jack," she cried in horror, "I almost doubted your word. Can you forgive me?"

"Aw, that's all right, little girl," said Jack magnanimously, as he kissed her. And as he pressed her curly head to his manly bosom there was the faint crackle of paper. But then, Jill couldn't be expected to know what it was that lay hidden in his inside breast pocket, eh?

What's Worth Doing At All, Is Worth Doing Well

Many a passerby has stopped to watch a man at work, simply because he shows such an evident enthusiasm and enjoyment in what he is doing.

Enthusiasm and Pride-in-accomplishment are usually found running hand in hand, closely followed by Success.

It is a fortunate man who can do some one thing just a little better than another, however small that something may be.
